"THE HERALD"

HOTS and COLDS

By Betty Barclay

November is the month when both the cold and the hot dainty seems to be in order—one lingering because of its deliciousness, while the other clamors for attention because of the falling temperature. Here are two recipes that fit into November and the "depression" as well:

Sweet Potato Puns

2 cups cooked and seasoned sweet potatoes, mashed
2 tablespoons brown sugar
1-3 cup hot water
1 cup crumbled ginger snaps
2 tablespoons butter

Put sweet potatoes in buttered pudding dish and sprinkle with sugar. Over this pour hot water. Crumble ginger snaps and mix with softened butter. Spread over top of prepared potatoes. Bake in a hot oven (425 degrees F.) 20 minutes. Six portions.

Economy Snack

Try pretzels and ice cream for a late snack at night—whether company is present or not. Coffee, tea, cocoa or any hot beverage will blend with this unusual yet tasteful dish.

Another choice nocturnal morsel is country rarebit, which is easy to make. While stirring a tablespoon of flour in the same quantity of melted butter, slowly add three-quarters of a cup of milk and cook for two minutes, before putting in a half pound of soft mild cheese, cut in small pieces. Season with salt, cayenne pepper, and a dash of mustard, continuing to stir until the cheese is fully melted. It is served on butter wafers or flake soda crackers.

Holiday Fruit Cup
(Serves 12)

6 oranges
2 small grapefruit
1 cup white cherries, stoned
6 tablespoons lemon juice
2 cups powdered sugar

Budyettes and emreletes

Segment oranges and grapefruit. Combine fruits and sprinkle with lemon juice and sugar. Chill well and add rubyettes and emreletes.

The color note of the red and green garnishes may be further developed by serving fruit in double cocktail glasses with finely chopped green or red tinted ice in outer glass. Ice is made in iceless refrigerator from water to which vegetable coloring has been added.

PENNY SAVING MAIN DISHES

Don't joke about hamburg steak. When properly prepared and garnished, it is delicious as well as economical. The seasoning is very important. A dash of sugar not only opens and mellows the flavor, but imparts a wonderful zest and savor by acting as a blending agent for the other seasonings.

Hamburg on Toast

Mix one pound of hamburg with one teaspoon each of sugar and salt, ¼ teaspoon of pepper and make into flat, loosely mixed cakes, or leave in the bulk. Cut rounds of bread 2 to 3 inches in diameter and toast on one side only, spread the ground, seasoned beef on the other side and broil five minutes. Drop a bit of butter on each hamburg and serve tastefully garnished with sliced tomato or parsley.

Meat Flat Mignon

Mix one and one-half pounds of finely ground chuck or rump steak with one teaspoonful of finely ground suet, one teaspoon of salt, one teaspoonful of sugar, one-quarter teaspoonful of pepper, and paprika to taste. Make up into flat cakes one inch thick, twist a thin slice of bacon around the cakes and broil or pan broil fifteen to twenty minutes.

Here and There

Over 100,000 lbs. of eels are exported annually from Canada, principally to Germany and the United States. They are caught along the lower St. Lawrence River and off the Atlantic Coast.

A total of 544,129 radio receiving licenses have been issued by the Canadian Government Radio Branch from April 1 to September 30, 1932, or approximately one to every eighteen persons of the population of the Dominion.

A movie theatre has been installed on R. M. S. Aorangi on its Australasian run and passengers had the first entertainment in that line on a recent voyage. This is the first ship to reach Vancouver carrying sound movie equipment.

China's first woman barrister, Mrs. Lo Soon Kim Teo, was among the passengers aboard the Empress of Russia, recently sailing from Vancouver. Mrs. Soon obtained her legal training in England and is attached to the Hong Kong bar.

The Canadian people seem to have developed a considerable taste for macaroni, vermicelli, spaghetti and the like—Italian food preparations. Output of 14 Canadian factories in 1931 was 20,311,423 pounds as compared with 14,819,625 lbs. in 1930.

With Remembrance Day in our minds, it is timely to recall the brief epitome of Canada's part in the war inscribed on a tablet in the House of Parliament at Ottawa: — "Six hundred twenty-eight thousand, six hundred forty-two bore the badge of Canada in the Great War; sixty thousand six hundred sixty-one met death and passed on."

Good hunting is reported from the Bates Camp, near Matagama, Ontario, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, seventy miles east of Sudbury. Moose and deer are very numerous close to the camp and in one morning a couple of U. S. hunters secured a fine bull moose and a deer. They killed to the limit of their licenses within a few days.

A free scholarship to be held at L'Ecole Polytechnique of the University of Montreal, offered by the Canadian Pacific Railway to minor sons of employees of the railway, was awarded to J. P. Lecavalier, 18-year-old son of Ephrem Lecavalier, chief clerk at the Mile End Station. The award entitles to five years study proceeding to the degree of Bachelor of Civil Engineering.

Canadian Pacific Railway low rate return bargain excursions, a highly popular feature of the railway's operation since February last, have been and will be well maintained up to the end of the year. Outstanding recently have been the trip to Chicago from Montreal and the shorter trips into and out of the major cities from and to the surrounding provinces. The rate and a quarter fare for return trips during the Remembrance Day holiday was well patronized and this concession is again to be offered for the Christmas and New Year holidays. (576)

BLANE'S FEATHER BED

He looked me over again; his hand was itching to take out his gun, but his common sense seemed to be arguing against it.

"You win," he said after a minute. "You know a whole lot more about this business than I do. I reckoned it would be better to pull her off her cayuse than it would be to shoot her if she tried to run away. But you're right. You're always right. It's better to stop them with lead than with the rope."

I didn't answer him. I had been brought up to hold my tongue. When he had untied the Yaqui woman's hands I started off at the head of the column; next came the feather bed, and then the woman and Blane.

I didn't enjoy that ride very much. I had taken a liking to Blane until he showed up with the woman, and I thought he had to me. I had seen enough of the white men in that country to know how they felt about Mexicans. They didn't like them, and they didn't trust them, and they had more or less reason for both. I suppose it's the same with the Mexican. It's like trying to mix cats and dogs, mixing the two races. Either can fight among themselves, and it's all right, but when they mix up with each other the hair and fur sure do fly!

We dropped down the side canon until we reached the valley. There Blane's feather bed tried to veer off into Mexico and he had to round it up. I watched the woman while he was doing it. She made no move to get away. I don't know whether she could talk American or not. I know she didn't. She sat like a stone image on her cayuse.

If she knew it was because of me that Blane had taken the rope off her wrists, she didn't show any signs of thanks. She never even smiled. Not that I was looking for a smile either, but her not smiling made her seem more like some animal than ever, though what kind of animal I don't know, for the most animals will show fear or joy or some emotion, and she showed nothing.

When Blane had chased the burro out of a mesquite thicket on to the trail we sat out again and rode up through the valley until we came to the canon where my horse had shied at the feather bed.

I had been riding along at a slow trot, with only a glance over my shoulder now and then to see that I was not setting too fast a pace for the burro. Now Blane called out:

"Reckon you'd better push along a bit faster through the canon. Don't want to get boxed up in it with night coming on."

It was the first time he had spoken, and I guessed by his tone that he was getting over his grouch. I didn't know what he meant by getting "boxed up" in the canon, for as far as I knew that was the only trail through the mountains, and the walls were anywhere from a hundred to a thousand feet high. But I wanted to show him I could forget as well as he could, and it was getting dark; so I gave my horse a touch of the spur and took the fast trot. The burro's feet twinkled along after me with a speed that I wouldn't have believed if I hadn't seen it.

The woman and Blane took up the canter, for when a cavalry horse trots out your Southern horse can't keep pace with him.

I had been over that trail several times before with the troop. It was mostly rock with here and there a bit of boulder-strewn sand. I had always picked my way through it at the walk before, but with Blane calling for more speed, and I thinking he knew his business, I kept right on going, trusting to my horse to keep his feet.

We were nearing the farther end where the canon came out on the hillside above our camp, when I heard a yell from Blane, followed by the crack of a rifle.

I pulled in my horse, and the feather bed came jamming into his croup, upsetting him so for the minute that I had all I could do to get him in hand and couldn't see what was doing behind me.

Then I saw the Yaqui woman was off her horse, and I thought she had tried to get away and Blane had shot her. But on beyond her I saw Blane he had dismounted. He had got his horse down cavalry fashion and was shooting over it at a crowd of Mexicans who were piling up the canon on their cayuses. They had taken a long shot at him, and I thought he had got the woman instead.

"Drive the burro back!" Blane shouted between shots.

I thought to myself that we should have a chance to see what kind of a bullet-stopper the bed would make now. I ought to have dismounted of course, for my big cavalry horse stood up like a battle-sight bullseye at a hundreds yards, but you don't always do what you ought to do when you get into a scrimmage.

I wanted to get that feather bed back to Blane, and I wanted to get it back in a hurry. So I charged my animal at the burro yelling at the top of my lungs. It wheeled about and went scuttling back down the canon like a scared rabbit. Blane tried to catch it as it went by, but it was no use. It hurtled his horse and went on down the canon. The packing rope had worked off the read end of the bed so that it floated almost level.

I slipped from my horse then and dropped beside Blane. But there was no need of it. If the thing had scared me in broad daylight, you can guess what it did do to those Mexicans who believe in ghosts!

Their horses broke and ran. For a minute the canon was full of flying sombreros and wheeling cayuses. Then the whole gang disappeared round a turn, and the feather bed, looking now as if it were moving over the canon bed at sixty miles an hour, disappeared after them.

Blane got to his feet and pulled up his horse.

"What are you going to do?" I shouted.

"Do!" he shouted. "I'm going after my feather bed."

"But they'll sure get you then!" I warned him.

"Get one nothing," he retorted. "They won't stop until they reach Mexico City!" Then he was off down the canon.

I walked back to see what I could do for the Yaqui woman. It wasn't much, for she wasn't there. Her cayuse was gone also. I guessed that she was up in the hills by that time, making her way back overland toward Mexico, and I was glad of it.

Then I set out after Blane. But I didn't have to go far; I met the feather bed at the next bend in the canon, and Blane was riding along behind it.

"Are you all right?" I asked.

"Sure," he said, cheerful enough "Why shouldn't I be?"

"The woman got away."

"Did she?" he inquired. It didn't seem to bother him much. "Let her go. That was your friend Enriquez at the head of that gang. I'll get a few more men and go down and clean up the whole crowd. But say!" he went on in a pleased tone, "Can you beat it!"

"Beat what?"

"That feather bed of mine. I knew it was good for defensive warfare, but when it gets up on its hind legs and takes the offensive—"

He was lost for words, and so was I.

For the Busy Farmer
News and Information

Mangles, turnips and sugar beets are reported as very good crops generally throughout the province and the growers have been busy harvesting their yields.

Reports would indicate that live stock, especially cattle, are going into winter conditions in excellent shape, and the open weather is welcomed because it prolongs the pasturing season and shortens the stabling period.

The Chicago Show

Ontario farmers will again take a prominent part in the competitive classes of the 1932 International Grain and Hay Show in Chicago, Nov. 26th, to Dec. 3rd, in connection with the International Live Stock Exposition. A. H. Martin, assistant director of the Marketing Branch of the Department of Agriculture, has charge of distributing premium lists and entry cards in this province, and will provide copies upon request. Entries may be made without charge up to Nov. 10th. The O.A.C. will have an educational exhibit as usual, and Mr James Laughland of the O.A.C. will serve as Canadian member of the small grains judging committee. Ontario will also have an official representative to take personal charge of handling the sample from this province and returning those which exhibitors request to be sent back. Ontario won a large share of the coveted awards n 1931 and it is expected that our growers will again make a good showing this year.

Quantity of Ontario Cheese Consigned to England

It has been brought to the attention of the Ontario Marketing Board that dairy farmers producing milk for the manufacture of cheese, especially those in the Woodstock and Bellville districts are watching with considerable interest an experiment to develop new cheese markets. Two carloads of the finest quality grade cheese have been consigned to London, England, by the Oxford Cheese Patrons' Association, Woodstock, and the Central Ontario Cheese Patrons' Association, Belleville There the cheese will be sold in small lots through the regular trade channels.

Experiments will be conducted in selling cheese in different stages of maturity and preference for color on the various British markets will be investigated. Handling costs of every nature including expenses involved in transportation, trucking, dockage, storage, British inland freight, etc., as well as the various commissions and other charges made by the British brokers and produce firms will be looked into.

Honey Prospects Bright

A cable to the Ontario Marketing Board indicates the prospects for Ontario honey, on the British market, as exceedingly bright. Empire stocks of high grade honey are low, thus creating a favorable condition for the reception of to surplus from Ontario. The cable states that at present no old crop New Zealand honey is available.

Because of a shortage of immediately available high grade new crop honey, present prices on bulk honey may be abnormally high, it is expected however that prices will continue well above those of last year.

Service to Growers

"A real service to the fruit and vegetable producers is being effected by the Ontario Growers' Markets Council," said J. A. Carroll, secretary of the Marketing Board recently. In order to be in a position to answer inquiries and to place buyers in touch with sellers, the council is sending out query forms in an attempt to determine the quantity of winter vegetables and at what price producers are willing to sell Mr. Carroll pointed out that growers who neglected to fill in and return these forms were running the risk of allowing possible markets for winter vegetables to slip from their grasp.

Prizes For Barley

According to J. A. Carroll, Ontario Department of Agriculture, there is a very definite market for a good grade of malting barley.

Certain interests, with the idea of encouraging the growth of malting barley in Ontario, have donated cash prizes to be awarded the best exhibits of 100 pounds of Ontario grown six-rowed barley shown at the royal Winter Fair. The first prize consists of a gold medal and five hundred dollars. The other cash prizes are relatively smaller.

Barley entered in this competition will be judged more for suitability for malting than for feed or seed. The most desirable features of barley for malting are soundness, full size and uniformity of kernel, freedom from other grains, weed seeds and inert matter.

Dipping Sheep

Ticks and other external parasites of sheep are serious enough at any time and cause more direct loss than is generally supposed, but during the period when the sheep are in winter quarters it is even more important to rid them of all sources of irritation. It is especially desirable that the flock be clean before and during the lambing, otherwise the infestation is sure to be passed along to the lambs which will thus receive a serious set-back at the most important period of their lives.

Properly dipped in the autumn, on some warm day when the fleeces will dry out quickly, the whole flock will remain clean throughout the winter, unless, of course, other undipped animals are brought to the farm. With the very convenient powder dips, sheep are put through the minimum of bother and at a cost of only a few cents per head. The only thing necessary is to make sure of good dip, diluted to the proper strength, and that every animal is passed through the solution slowly and thoroughly saturated.

Hog Production

Hog production has for many years been an important part of farming operations in Canada, and especially Ontario. It may be freely acknowledged that there have been periods when prices barely covered costs; but it is a fact that the average results of any ten-year period in the history of hog production in this province or any other part of Canada shows that the production of hogs has yielded a profit to the intelligent producer.

If then, over any period of ten years the production of hogs has proven to be profitable it would surley be advisable to develop this branch of farming. In this, as in any other field of endeavor, the long view of policy is wise and necessary. Plans must be laid for a considerable time ahead. these plans should provide for better methods of breeding, feeding and rearing and the volume of production necessary to maintain a position in the world's markets.

Commercial hog production in Canada began to be important about 1890. In the census year of 1891 Canada's hog population numbered 1,268,000. Every ten years since that time the population has steadily increased, until in 1931 we had 4,777,000 hogs. This itself is abundant proof that hog production has, on the average, been profitable.

On account of the fact that Canada produces a large surplus of cheap feed grains and has relatively small consuming population, it will be natural that this country will produce a surplus of hog products for domestic requirements. This inevitable surplus must be exported. If it is a small amount and in uncertan quantities, the marketing of such a surplus is very difficult. Therefore it is necessary that this country should develop hog production so as to have a fair volume of product available for export steadily.

In addition to volume, a quality of product which will create its own demand is an absolute necessity. It is therefore, evident that the farmers of Ontario in their best interests should produce as large a volume of good quality product as their conditions and means of breeding and feeding will permit.

For many years the export market for Ontario bacon has been Great Britain. The sentiment of consumers in Britain is favorable to our bacon. But be trade there asks that the quality shall be equal to that of other countries and that the supply shall be dependable. These are very reasonable demands and Ontario producers must surely be prepared to meet them.

THREW AWAY HIS STICK

When Sciatica Yielded To Kruschen

There can be no doubt that this man has finished walking with a stick, for it is now four years since he discarded it.

He writes:— For 18 months I suffered with chronic sciatica and rheumatism, and was unable to walk without the aid of a stick. But after taking Kruschen Salts for a short time I was able to throw away the stick. It is now four years since this happened and I have not lost a day from work. I shall never be without Kruschen Salts, as they are worth their weight in gold. You can use this letter as you please, as I can honestly recommend Kruschen Salts to any sufferer."—C.F.

If the eliminating organs become sluggish they permit harmful uric acid to accumulate and deposit itself in the tissues, muscles and joints in the form of needle-pointed crystals, which, piercing the nerve sheaths, cause excruciating pains of sciatica. The six Salts in Kruschen stimulate the eliminating organs to healthy regular action. Mischievous uric acid is then given no chance to collect.

Mr. Richards was persuaded to buy a parrot that could jabber in several languages. He ordered it sent home.

The same day his wife ordered a chicken for dinner. On leaving she said to the cook, "Mary, there's a bird coming for dinner. Have it cooked for Mr. Richards when he gets home."

The parrot arrived first, and Mary followed instructions. Dinner was served.

"What's this?" exclaimed Mr. Richards.

Mary told him.

"But, for goodness' sake, Mary," he said, "this is awful! That bird could speak in three languages."

"Then why the dickens didn't he say something?" asked Mary.

WISTFULNESS

If in these days of storm and stress we might
The source of rest and peace and comfort see,
Run by the guidance of an inward light,
As joyous brooks to their own melody;
If simple joys around the evening fire,
Sweet childhood's prattle and a mother's smile,
Could once again the old, old glow inspire,
Once more the heart of heaviness beguile,
Then we should ask no meretricious aid
From outward things, for in the soul, ye, there
At being's centre were the smart allayed,
And, like surcease of pain, all unaware,
Wraiths like would vanish this present sorrow,
And leave sweet joy to-day, sweet rest to-morrow.

—A. B. Cooper.

THE LAUGH CORNER

He had been dining too well, and, hailing a taxi, he crawled gingerly inside, after faltteringly giving the driver his destination. It happened that the opposite door had been left unlatched by the previous fare, and stumbling against it, the inebriated one fell outside again.

He picked himself up with great difficulty, and accosted the highly amused driver. "That's pretty quick work," he said, "how much do I owe you?"

Bridegroom—"I married you just for looks."

Bride—"Cheer up — you'll get plenty."

The wife had been up on the budget plan. At the end of each month she and her husband would go over the accounts together. Every once in a while he would find an item, "H. O. K., $1.50," and a little farther on, "H. O. K., $3."

Finally he asked, "My dear, what is this—'H. O. K.'d'"

"Heaven only knows," she replied.

Miracles of the Present Day

Mrs. J. was happy in her home with her husband and two little children. It is true they didn't have much but, until the husband took sick and their savings were used up, life was pleasant enough. Long days and nights of worry and anxiety coupled with extra work had their dire effect, however, and a breakdown caused the doctor to secure her admission to the Muskoka Hospital for Consumptives.

She was almost overwhelmed with hopelessness, but before very long, the kindly medical and nursing attention, the uninterrupted rest, the fresh air and good food, worked their "miracle." Now Mrs. J. is quite sure that she will go home soon, to face and overcome life's difficulties—such being the effects of the return of hope and health which so often are the gifts of the Muskoka Hospital.

This work needs the generous support of many friends, without which it could not be carried on. A subscription from you will be gratefully received. Please send it to G. A. Reid, 223 College St., Toronto 2.
