"GROWING OUR OWN FLOWER BULBS FOR BEAUTY"

Read . . . as told in the American Weekly with this Sunday (Oct. 4th) issue of The Detroit Sunday Times . . how, now that tulip and other flower imports from Holland have ceased, the American bulb-growing industry has come into its own, and — who knows — may even have to stock up the Dutch when the war is over. Be sure to get Sunday's Detroit Times.

"THE DIM LANTERN"

He stopped suddenly. There had been the crack of a twig and he had turned his eyes towards the sound. And there, poised above him, her hat off, the warm wind blowing her bobbed black hair, blowing, too, the folds of the lilac frock back from her slender figure, stood Jane . . . Jane . . . ●

He went charging up the bank towards her.

"My dear," he said, "my dear."

That was all. But he was there, holding her hands, devouring her with his eyes.

Then he dropped her hands. "I thought you were a ghost," he said, a little awkwardly. "I called you up this morning and Sophy said you were in town." ●

"I came out at noon. The day was so perfect. I had to see the Glen."

"It is perfect. When I found you were out, I got the boys. I am taking a half holiday after my trip."

He was talking naturally now, smiling at her as she stood beside him. She found herself trembling, almost afraid to speak again lest her voice betray her. She had been more shaken than he by the encounter. She wondered at his ease.

And so it happened that, woman like, as they walked alone at last after the boys had left them in the little pine grove back of the house, that Jane said, "Evans, you haven't wished me happiness." ●

"No," he said, and his eyes met hers squarely. "I think you might spare me that, Jane."

She flushed. "Oh," she said, "I'm sorry." ●

He laid his hand for a moment on her shoulder. "Don't be sorry, little Jane. But we won't talk about it. That's the best way for both of us—not to talk."

"Jane, you're crying," Baldy said, sharply. "What's the matter dear?"

He put his arm about her. "What's the matter?"

"Baldy, I don't want to get—married. I want to stay with you—forever—"

"You shall stay with me."

She sobbed and sobbed, and he soothed her. "Little sister, little sister," he said, "you are crying too much in these days."

At last Jane spoke. "Dearest, I must marry him. There's no way out. He's done so much for me and some day, perhaps, I'll love him."

FANTASIA

By George Orr in the Continent Staff Publication of the North American Life Assurance Company

I dipped in my pocket for the change, money was freer these days anyway. It startled me when the fellow tapped me on the shoulder, for if I hadn't heard him approach. He was in uniform, lean, a bit grimy, with the scent of gunpowder about him. I followed his gesture, and for the moment my eyes seemed to trick me.

Moving along the highway was a supply column, headed for the battle area. What amazed me was the nature of its burden. Two plows in one, perched on a carrier, piled high on another truck were cases marked "Drop uniforms, 1942 design." Refrigerators, cabinet radios, easy chairs filled still another truck.

My visitor spoke. "The boys had a little money to spare so they ordered them," he explained. "They want to look a bit smarter and have a bit of comfort."

It was too ridiculous.

"But hang it all, man," I said, "we're at war! There's only so much room in these trucks and they've got to have Bren Guns, ammunition, tank parts, grenades, and those things that they really need to do the job! How do they think they're going to win if they keep trucking that stuff around?"

I discerned a twinkle in his eye as he replied: "I understand you people are still doing that sort of thing back home." He paused, while I tried frantically to follow his logic. Then he continued: "You burn gasoline in pleasure driving; to be fashionable, you buy clothes you don't need; you still buy new furniture, and I'm not sure that you couldn't use your food stocks a bit more wisely. Like you said, you're only put so much productive capacity, and you need as much of that as you can possibly spare to make the Bren guns, ammunition, and tanks that you're so keen to have your boys use."

How do think you're going to win the war if you keep industries working overtime to make the things that you squander money on?"

I turned to the sale slips. "Hurry, I guess. I don't need it after all." I would save that quarter, and I could think of quite a few others that I could save just as easily.

I glanced back at the highway. Normal traffic was there again. My friend had vanished.

County Council Condemns

drastically cut, there followed the inevitable shortage. Later the price was raised and there was soon plenty of pork again. The same thing applies to all farm produce. When prices are lower than other commodities it creates discouragement.

Mr. Gilbert— All we want is a square deal. When prices are set in any other business everything is taken into consideration. What sense is there in farmers trying to carry on production at a loss? It isn't reasonable to expect it. I heard a professor at Guelph (note it) that every time a farmer ships milk he loses money. I say the farmer would be better off if he would stand up and fight for his rights. What does Donald Gordon know of what it costs to raise farm produce. Mr. Gordon has a banker's background, not a farmer's, and what has banking been but to keep down the farmer."

Mr. Hillmer—"I quite agree. What does Donald Gordon or any of those lawyers down at Ottawa know about what it costs to raise cattle, and I say if the farmer can't get his price then he isn't going to raise the goods. And I don't blame him."

Mr. Coutts— I think it is the packers and dealers that are to blame for the present shortage."

Other members agreed on the remarks made, and finally the resolution passed.

Special Communications—A letter re train service at Campbellville and Hornby stations from the CPR was given consideration by this committee and later filed. The letter enclosed copy of a letter which had been sent to the Transport Board in Ottawa which in effect stated that it was not considered advisable to change the train service in any way since to do so would seriously interfere with existing schedules making connections at both Winston and Derby and cause a (twenty) minute delay. Council agreed that further action in the matter should be delayed pending advice from the Transport Board.

A request was received from the Road Liability Insurance Co., of the County asking the council to pass a by-law authorizing the solicitors to act as Defence in the claim of the Marshall case. The by-law was not passed since it was not considered necessary by the county solicitor, the Insurance Co. already having such authority.

Hospital accounts were passed to the amount of $865.68. Further accounts for $96.64 were ordered paid. A resolution also to the effect that the typewriter be repaired every two months was passed.

The Halton County Firemen's Association was given a grant of $150.00.
