CEYLON

Mr. and rMs. Percy Hunt received a telegram the past week from McGee Sask.,, where they have their farm rented this year, that their barn, two graineries, all the feed and implements had been burned by prairie fire. This means a big loss to Mr. Hunt. Trouble never comes single handed. Saturday, while assisting Mr. Arrowsmith at timber, the axe, which he was using, glanced across the foot, cutting the big toe severely to the bone. The doctor had to dress the wound with seven stitches. This will lay Mr. Hunt up for a time. Much sympathy is expressed for them in their trouble.

THE SONG OF THE STREAM

I sat by the side of a purling stream
And listened awhile by its edge;
I dreamed on its bank a wonderful dream
Of the chorus that lasted an age.

With a hop and a skip I lilted along
O'er the stones and round the bends.
And took a brief voice in its bubbling song—
The stream's soft song that ne'er ends.

And I found as I sat by the water that day
And my heart raced on with the stream
That it whispered and talked in a wonderful way
Of the life it had led, and the things it had been.

It echoed the thunder's thundering roar;
It had the soft swish of the rain:
And the wind in the trees I heard once more
With sybillant refrain.

The waterfall and the meadow's peace
The roar of a team as it crossed
The loose-boarded bridge; the honk of wild geese,
I heard in its song, and then lost.

Dear children played in the open air
Light hearted, clear-eyed and sweet,
And I thought I could hear them talking there
In the waters that passed my feet.

Thus it sings its song of wonderful things,
Unending, untiring and sweet,—
And it laughs and it sobs as it changingly sings
The song of the world at my feet.
