LADY BANK

It was with deepest regret that word was received here of the death of Mrs. Albert Williams, who died at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. Howard, Owen Sound. Mrs. Williams was before her marriage a resident of this place. Here she spent her girlhood days, loved and respected by all. We extend our deepest sympathy to the sorrowing family.

When we asunder part
It gives us inward pain;
But we shall still be joined in heart
And hope to meet again.

A Pligrimage To The Old World

The Motherland and France As They Appear To-day

FROM J. D. CLARKE

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Clarke of Ottawa are on a visit to Mr. and Mrs. F. H. W. Hickling, having returned from a visit of several months to Great Britain and the European continent. Asked by The Advance as to conditions in the old land Mr. Clarke said many changes had taken place since his last visit fourteen years ago. The disturbance in world-wide trade has resulted in considerable lack of employment and only by the re-establishment of normal conditions of the earth—particularly those of Europe—can betterment of the workers be effected.

"Masters of industry with whom I conversed," Mr. Clarke continued, "are not downhearted. They see improvement, but fear it will be slow. The government dole to those out of work has been criticised as tending to promote idleness, especially among the young, but these grants could scarcely be avoided, as the hundreds of thousands of men returning from the front had to be provided for till they got a start in civil life, otherwise there might have been a revolution.

Dole Is Abused

There is much evidence, however, that the dole has been abused. For example, while we were in Glasgow a young woman was arrested for stealing. She appropriated the wedding dress of her mistress, stole some choice clothing from her male employer, and married an out-of-work dole receiver. At the trial it was revealed that immediately after the wedding the husband presented an appeal to the authorities for an increased dole. "I am now a married man," he said, "and I ask for a dole for my wife." He would have got it but for the fact that his wife was sent to jail for larceny of the wedding garments! Very many more, however, cannot get work at their trades until times improve. The backbone of ironworking on the Clyde, for instance, was shipbuilding. But at the close of the war it was found that there was a great over-supply of ships, for ordinary commerce, and the thousands of men ordinarily employed on war ships are, under the scrapping agreement reached by the Washington conference, likely to be without work at their trade for many a day.

The Need Is Co-operation

On the surface, however, Britain appars to afford a living to millions of men and women in excess of the numbers which economists of pre-Victorian times prophecied would bring the land to a condition of famine. Masters of industry assert that if the motherland is to keep the vanguard, her workers must co-operate with them in the endeavor to obtain and hold markets for their products. It is maintained that there is too much broken time in Britain, that while in Germany and France they willingly work six days a week and longer hours daily, the British worker demands numerous half holidays in order to attend the great sporting gatherings in addition to the Saturday half holiday; and moreover in some trades have countenanced a ca' canny policy in order that a job may not too soon be completed! Employers find it difficult, under conditions of this description, to compete with continental producers, while in the south of England last month I had brought to my attention the fact that because of the lack of co-operation between employers and employes, builders of new houses at the seaside resorts were importing large quantities of bricks and roofing tiles from Belgium and France, while British workmen went idle.

Improvements In The Habits

There have been improvements in the habits of the British populace since the war. Public houses do not open now till 10 a.m.; they are shut for part of the afternoon, and close for the night early in the evening. Then the tax on intoxicants is high and the price of beer and whisky greatly increased. The chief cause for improvement is attributed by some to a growing indisposition of employers to give work to the habitual drinker, who is found to be less efficient and reliable that the abstemious worker.

Ordinarily those who visit France invariably make for Paris, probably the most artificial, if the most artistic capital, in Europe. On this occasion, having previously seen Paris, we endeavored to get an insight into rural life outside the war zone. We spent a short time in Normandy, a country of beautiful landscape, quaint little homesteads and apple orchards. The apples appeared to be very small, why I was not able to ascertain. They would not, however, find a good market in Great Britain. The French turn them to account in producing cider, and we saw many car loads of the fruit on the railways en route to the mills.

One could not but remark the absence of men from the French farms. In no other respect is the devastation from the war more manifest than in the blotting out of the French rural male population. Women were everywhere seen performing the many duties ordinarily undertaken in this country by men.

Paris, to which we made a flying visit, we found still the bustling, irrepressible capital, with probably more foreigners in her pleasure resorts and great hotels than natives of the country. Parisians say they cater, not for Frenchmen, but for the foreign visitor, who is looked upon, probably with some truth in the case of tourists from the new world, as persons more anxious to get rid of their money than to judiciously invest it.

War Cemeteries Cared For

A visit to a cemetery back of the war front, near the mouth of the Somme, convinced Mr. Clark that the authorities take good care of the last resting places of the heroic dead. The cemeteries are under the constant care of landscape gardeners. At the head of each grave is a stone with an inscription giving the name, regiment and date of death, and a suitable motto. The grass is kept like velvet and beautiful flowers are everywhere.

Of course we visited Wembly and inspected the great exhibition there. All visitors who have seen the Canadian display express their pride, as we do, of our national exhibit, and return home confirmed in the belief that few —I doubt if any—countries are more attractive than our own.

Lived In Artemesia Seventy-Six Years

Mr. Calvin Boyce, the oldest continuous resident of Artemesia township, passed away at his home on the 4th line after a very brief illness of heart trouble. Mr. Boyce came to Artemesia when only five years of age and lived here continuously until he died, at the good old age of 81 years. Hew as a strong, vigorous man all his life and never had to call in a physician until a couple of weeks before his death. He fed and watered his horse the morning of his death, but in the afternoon took a serious heart weakness and passed away.

When a young man the deceased gentleman married Miss Elizabeth Snell, also of Artemesia, who survives him, and by whom there was a family of six children—Thomas, Priestville, Sask.; J. J. Boyce, Southampton; Mrs. Alex. Clark, Melville, Sask.; Mrs. Wm. Kerton Honesdale, Pa.; and Mrs. David Marsh of Toronto. Mr. Boyce was a Presbyterian by faith.

The funeral took place Tuesday afternoon, when interment was made in Flesherton cemetery.

Mr. Boyce was one of the real pioneers, probably the last of the line in Artemesia, a township which he saw grow from a howling wilderness to a land of plenty and contentment —from the old ox team to the newfangled automobile.. He was respected by all who knew him, and his memory will be kept green by the sorrowing sons and daughters, and by neighbors who knew his qualities and his industry in the days of pioneering. To the aged widow and family we extend sympathy.

RECOVERING FROM ACCIDENT

We understand that Miss Ila Batcheler, who was so severely injured by having her hair caught in a cream separator at her home, Proton Station is recovering nicely and it is hoped she will be able to return from Owen Sound hospital in a few days.

Exceptional Values In Seasonable Merchandise

Stripe and Plain Flannels are Both Serviceable and popular

No material at the present time is more asked for than Sport Flannels, in both plain and stripes. No wonder that this material is so popular, as it adapts itself so perfectly to the present styles of dresses and what could be more serviceable and warm, especially for school or home or street wear. The cloths we are showing are exceptionally fine in texture and being manufactured from a fine quality of wool will retain their color and appearance until they are practically worn out. Full 54 inches wide. Specially priced at .....$1.95 and $2.50 a yard

Homespuns that are Attractive in Appearance and Remarkable Wearers.

Another dress material that rivals the flannels is pure wool homespun. This cloth is a shade coarser in texture but has remarkably long wearing qualities and retains its appearance indefinitely. You make no mistake in buying this for school wear, in fact for any class of wear where durability is desired. 54 inches wide. Specially priced at $1.65, $1.85 and $1.95 per yard.

Millinery That is Most Reasonable in Price. Styles that are the Newest Obtainable.

Marvelous indeed has been the success of this department thus far this season, the number of hats sold has far succeded our expectations. In face we have sold hats to patrons from many of the surrounding towns and also from our nearby city. Be wise and save money by patronizing this splendid Millinery Department.

Ladies' Coats of Great Merit in a Wide Range of the Many New Models.

Never before in the History of our Mantle Department have we assembled such a wide range of the many popular styles in fabric and design of models that are here for your inspection. Coats to suit all tasts and all pocket books. $15.00 to $49.50.
