Poetry.

A HARVEST SONG.

The toil of the day is ended,
The night is at her noon,
And the harvest song swells blithely up
Beneath the harvest moon.
Then thread a quicker measure,
And chant a louder strain;
With a dance and song, the day prolong,
That brings the golden grain.

From out the distant mountain
Comes the voice of the cascade;
And the nearer gleam of its silver stream
Makes glad the silent glade,
Through all the shadowy forest
Is heard the fall of leaves;
And the timid hare treads stealthily
Among the nodding sheaves.

And now on every hill side,
The purple vintage glows,
As when a deeper radiance falls
From daylight at its close,
No time is it for sadness,
Despondency, or fear,
When Autumn comes in gladness
To crown the fruitful year.

Dear is the pleasant leaf-time,
When all is soft around—
When frost imprisoned rivulets
Are melting into sound.
And dear, too, is the season
When spring and summer meet—
When the woods are faint with odours,
And the hills are dim with heat.

But spring is but for pastime,
And summer but for show,
While autumn like a crowned king,
Has riches to bestow,
So he shall be the monarch
Of all the shining year,
And a crown shall wear, and a sceptre bear,
Of fruits and the golden year.

The Cholera in Egypt.

A correspondent of the Journal de Geneve, writing from Alexandria on the 19th of July, says: you ask me for the news of the cholera. It is getting on pretty well, though somewhat diminished by its excesses. For more than a month the epidemic has ravaged Alexandria in a terrible and unusual manner, and a thorough panic has seized upon the population. As early as the 14th of June, the Viceroy, in his position as Chief of the State, set the example of flight, by suddently quitting Alexandria and Egypt with his harem, in a vessel hastily engaged, and which set out for the open sea without any more settled purpose than that of flight. Since then he has been to the island of Chio, and afterwards to Constantinople. This precipitate departure spread terror among the population of Alexandria. All the more important persons at once imitated the Viceroy; they engaged vessels for themselves and families. The less wealthy rushed to the steamers, which left in all directions; the others embarked upon numberless sailing-ships. Every one ran away no matter how, no matter where. The employees and artisans sold their watches, their clothes to pay their passage; the dealers nailed up their the doors of their shops with planks, and abandoned their interests and their goods. The number of passports obtained at the consulates is estimated at 60,000. It was no longer a flight, it was a panic of terror. Doctors have deserted their posts; priests have abandoned the church, leaving to the dead the task of making their way to the other world without their assistance. In a word the clearing out has been complete, and there is no instance of a similar display of cowardice.

TAKE WHICH ROAD YOU PLEASE.—Of the many anecdotes of John Randolph, of Roanoke, we believe the following was never in print:

He was travelling in a part of Virginia with which he was unacquainted. In the meantime, he stopped at an inn near the forks of the road. The inn-keeper was a fine old gentleman, and no doubt one of the first families of the Old Dominion. Knowing who his distinguished guest was, he endeavoured to draw him into conversation, but failed in all his efforts. But in the morning, when Mr. Randolph was ready to start, he called for his bill which on being presented, was paid. The landlord, still anxious to have some conversation with him, began as follows;

Which way are you travelling, Mr. Randolph?'

'Sir?' said Randolph, with a look of displeasure.

'I asked,' said the landlord, 'which way are you traveling?'

Have I paid my bill?'

'Yes.'

'Do I owe you anything more?'

'No,'

'Well, I am going just where I please—do you understand?'

'Yes.'

The landlord by this time got somewhat excited, and Mr Randolph drove off. But to the landlord's surprise, in a few minutes the servant returned to enquire which of the forks of the road to take. Randolph not being out of hearing distance, the landlord shouted at the top of his voice:

'Mr Randolph, you don't owe me a cent. Jut take which road you please'

It is said that the air turned blue with the curses of Randolph.
