Boy's Life Incomplete Without Hallowe'en

Hallowe'en passed off very quietly as usual, with but a few pranks played by the smaller boys though no damage was done. How strange it seems that some of the older men forget so readily their younger days, when as boys they too so much enjoyed and looked forward to hallowe'en. The very name seems to stirr within the hearts of the youngsters the feeling that they really must be out playing some pranks to scare or surprise, or perchance, annoy some one. There really is no fun at all unless they are chased a number of times, the oftener the more thrilling, which all goes to make a boy's life less monotonous and more interesting. It all adds to the fun when on the following morning someone threatens what will be done, etc., if some little trifle is not replaced. But for many years Hallowe'en has been Hallowe'en and boys have been boys and October would not be complete without this day, the very last to end the fun of summer.

Eugenia Public School Scene Of Festivities

Social Evening Given People Of The Section

Our school was the scene of a very unique and pretty Hallowe'en party, when the teacher, Miss McQueen, together with the pupils, entertained the section. The school was decorated very prettily in orange and black streamers, lanterns with black witches and scary cats peering out here and there through decorations. Jack-O'-Lanterns, too, added to the decorations, and could be seen from every window, the light showing through the funny faces of each, giving the school from the outside quite a bright, merry appearance. The school was lighted by candles and altogether the decorations were carried out with splendid taste.

The children came in Hallowe'en costumes, very pretty some of them, while others were spooky and funny, and each pupil acted his part exceptionally well. There were about twenty of the villagers who masked and were the cause of great fun and merriment, which, of course, all added to the evening's enjoyment and success. A number of the men deserve credit for the hearty interest shown by wearing costumes that provoked so much laughter, and that will not be soon forgotten, for we always remember the occasions when fun and laughter are uppermost.

Miss McQueen had the pupils give a short program, appropriate to the occasion. Every number was splendid, one number being a ghost story, and at the end the chairman was jumped at which almost caused him to fall off his chair—but didn't, for Fred does not lose his head so easily—caused great applause. The choruses were hearty and community singing also lent a happy air to the party. After the program the party was entertained in the basement where games were indulged in, such as bobbing for apples and getting bobbed by apples. In the corner of the basement a poor old couple looking very spooky and queer told fortunes and did some surprisingly clever handreading. Apples were passed around and they contained fortunes, which were very flattering indeed. Everyone enjoyed the music during the lunch hour and, as usual, the lunch was a bountiful one, served by the ladies. Miss McQueen treated all to candy afterward and a little social time spent.

Altogether the evening was a grand success and reflects much credit upon the teacher, who spared no pains in making the evening an enjoyable one for all those present.

A TRUE STORY

Gore Bay Recorder: The editor of The Recorder, while out hunting partridge last week, walked into close quarters with a huge black bear. Being armed only with a light fowling piece, he decided to retire with as much dignity as possible under the circumstances. Having increased the distance between himself and bruin his dignity deserted him and the retirement that was commenced in good order broke into disorderly retreat. When about to reach the shelter of a friendly tree, a backward gllance at the enemy, revealed the bear going over a bluff in an opposite direction evidently intent on finding quarters in the forest that would prove a more healthful abiding place.

A pole which was being fixed for a scaffold fell and struck him on the head, knocking him to the floor and shaking him up badly. We hope he may be able to be around in a short time.

Mr. Martin Murphy was a caller in this part on Sunday.

Mr. Dan McGinnis and son, Mac, left this week for Kitchener, where they are employed in the timber works.

Miss Lilly Campbell who has been holidaying at her home returned to Toronto this week.

Judging by the way some people flounder around all day Sunday, it may yet be necessary to set aside Monday as a day of rest.
