Life Has Its Joys.

'Tis false to say that every day
Is nothing but a scene of gloom,
Each passing joy a gilded toy
To lure us onward to the tomb,

Each dewy morn whenever born
Tells man has never been forgot,
Each beaming star that shines afar,
Speaks blessings to his earthly lot.

The beauteous earth to us gives birth
A thousand comforts which we know,
Sin caused 'tis true, but yet how few
But find their cup at times o'erflow.

Even those who take this world and make
It all their god and all their stay,
Who seek but pelf and serve but self,
Have few a momentary ray.

How much more they who feel each day
The power to brighten and to mould
That soul of light, whose glories bright
Shall through eternity unfold.

Who know their dust arise yet must
A glorious and immortal frame,
Heaven's brightest ray will not dismay,
For they with angels kindred claim.

The Kind-Hearted Tanner.

The following incident is so beautiful and touching that it should be read in every household in the country. It develops the true, active principle of kindness. How many an erring mortal, making his first step in crime, might be redeemed by the exercise of this sublime trait in the character of the kind hearted Quaker.

William Savery, an eminent minister among the Quakers, was a tanner by trade. One night a quantity of hides were stolen from his tannery, and he had reason to believe that the thief was a quarrelsome, drunken neighbour, the name of John Smith.- Next week the following advertisement appeared in the country newspaper:

"Whoever stole a quantity of hides on the fifth of this month is hereby informed that the owner has a sincere wish to be his friend. If poverty tempted him to this false step the owner will keep the whole transaction secret and will gladly put him in the way of obtaining money by means more likely to bring him peace of mind!"

This singular advertisement attracted considerable attention, but the culprit alone knew who had made the kind offer. When he read it his heart melted within him and he was filled with sorrow for what he had done. A few nights afterward, as the tanner's family were about retiring to rest, they heard a timid knock, and when the door was opened there stood John Smith with a load of hides on his shoulders. Without looking up he said:

"I have brought these back, Mr. Savery; where shall I put them?"

"Wait till I can get a lantern, and I will go to the barn with thee," he replied; "then thou wilt come in and tell me how this happened. We will see what can be done for thee."

As soon as they were gone out his wife prepared some hot coffee, and placed pies and meat on the table. When they returned from the barn she said, "Neighbour Smith I thought some hot supper would be good for thee."

He turned his back toward her, and did not speak. After leaning against the fireplace in silence a few moments he said in a choked voice, "It is the first time I ever stole anything, and I have felt very badly about it. I am sure I didn't once think that I should ever come to what I am; but I took to drinking, and then to quarreling. Since I began to go down hill everybody gives me a kick. You are the first man that has ever offered me a helping hand. My wife is sickly and my children starving. You have sent them meat and meal. God bless you! but yet I stole the hides. But I tell you the truth when I say it is the first time I was ever a thief."

"Let it be the last, my friend," replied William Savery. "The secret lies between ourselves. Thou art still young, and it is in thy power to make up for lost time. Promise me that thou wilt not drink any intoxicating liquor for a year, and I will employ thee to more advantage on good wages. Thy little boy can pick up stones. But eat a bit now and drink some hot coffee; perhaps it will keep thee from craving anything stronger to-night. Doubtless thou wilt find it hard to abstain at first; but be of a brave heart for the sake of thy wife and children, and it will grow easy. When thou hast need of aught tell Mary, and she will give it thee."

The poor fellow tried to eat and drink, but the food seemed to choke him. After vainly trying to compose his feelings, he bowed his head on the table and wept like a child. After while he ate and drank, and his host parted with him for the night with a friendly words, "Try to do well, John, and thou wilt always find a friend in me."

John entered his employ the next day, and remained with him many years, a sober, honest, and steady man. The secret of the theft was kept between them; but after John's death William Savery sometimes told the story to prove that evil might be overcome with good.
