The Canadian Champion

MILTON, July 7, 1904.

English office, 30 Fleet Street, London, E. C., where Messrs. E. and J. Hardy & Co. will receive for us news, subscriptions and advertisements, and where our readers can, free of charge, see our paper when in England.

On Thursday the Government of Ontario appointed W. I. Dick, barrister, of Milton, County Crown Attorney for Halton. The Government was slow in taking action, but the appointment was the most satisfactory that could have been made. Mr. Dick is a sound lawyer and a good citizen, while his ten years' of service as secretary of the Halton Reform Association gave him a stronger claim on his party than that of any other candidate.

The Russ-Jap War.

Cabling early this morning The Daily Telegraph announces that a battle is in progress in the mountains 25 miles from Liaoyang. Many wounded are being brought in and the belief is that the Japanese are seeking to cut the Russians off from Mukden. The Japanese tenaciously hold Motien and Fenshui Passes on the road to Liaoyang. They report that the Russians have stripped the country bare of supplies of every sort, and this, of course, increases the transport difficulties. Most of the despatches relating to outpost fighting indicate that the bayonet is coming into use. The armies are very close together when the bayonet can be utilized, and a few dry days might yet give opportunity for a decisive engagement.

From Port Arthur comes another story of heroism on the part of the Japanese torpedo-boat crews. Four boats actually penetrated the inner harbor in the unsuccessful endeavor to sink the Russian ships at their moorings. The Russians destroyed two and crippled one. There must have been a considerable loss of life, as each boat would carry not less than twenty men, and if they were destroyers, as suggested in one of the despatches, the crews would range from 60 to 80. These attacks must be terribly trying to the Russians, who never know at what moment the foe will make another dash. Chinese refugees from Port Arthur say that the Russians are cutting up brass piping for the purpose of making ammunition—an ominous sign of shortage of war material.

Lord Dundonald.

With commendable promptitude the Canadian Government has dealt with the incident created by Lord Dundonald's insubordination. The sub-committee of the Canadian Privy Council made a recommendation which was subsequently approved by the committee, and finally by the Governor-General. In pursuance of this adopted recommendation, Lord Dundonald has been relieved of his position as General Officer commanding the Militia in Canada. No other course could have been taken unless the Government of the Dominion had been prepared to sacrifice every claim to self-respect and to the respect of the country. Further inquiry appears to show that there was no foundation for Lord Dundonald's charge that Mr. Fisher was actuated by political motives in striking out the name of a gentleman submitted by Lord Dundonald. But we altogether decline to argue the question on this ground. The report of the sub-committee asserts that the Minister of Militia was in daily attendance at his office when the question arose, and that Lord Dundonald was also in attendance at the same time in his office in the very same building. Lord Dundonald's proper course was perfectly clear. If he had well-founded objections to the list in its amended form it was his obvious duty to submit those objections to the responsible Minister. This he did not do; he refrained from discussing the question in a manner open to him, a course to which no objection could be taken, and preferred to make a public speech, in which he not only attacked the Administration, whose servant he was, but made ill-manered reflections on colonial manners. He did a wrong thing in a most offensive way. We have said that the Government acted with commendable promptitude. It was commendable, because, as is evident, Lord Dundonald had created a situation which, had it been prolonged, would have been full of danger to good relations between the colony and the mother country. Friendly relations can be maintained only by a full recognition of the rights of the Colonial Administration, rights on which Lord Dundonald essayed to tread with the heavy foot of a cavalry officer. Canada has vindicated her position as "a great self-governing colony." Not to have done this, and not to have done it at the earliest possible moment would have been a fatal mistake.—The New Age, London, Eng.

More Britons Coming.

The official immigration returns for the fiscal year show the total number of arrivals to be 130,329, to which will be added one or two thousand more for later arrivals. This is an increase, according to the present returns, of about 2,000 over the previous year, when the number was 128,364. The returns are as follows: British Isles, 50,115, as against 41,792 last year; continent of Europe and miscellaneous, 36,241, as against 37,099 last year; United States, 43,173, as against 49,473 last year. The increase from the British Isles is over 9,000. The decrease in the numbers from the United States, about 6,000, and a small decrease from the continent of Europe.

A Dutch Fishing Village.

Almost every fishing village in Holland has its special dress and its own quaint customs. One can see from old Dutch pictures that these have not varied for the last 200 years. One most interesting place is the island of Marken, a tongue of land on the margin of the Zuyder Zee, which can well be inspected in a couple of hours. It is so little above the sea level that the clusters of houses or tiny villages are built on mounds connected by bridges, and nearly every little house has its own little moat and its own little boat—everything except the people is on a diminutive scale in Holland—moored near the door so as to be handy in case of flood. The houses, with the exception of the church and the clergyman's house, are built of wood on high piles. They are none of them very old, as the place has often been flooded and burned. In winter Marken is often under water, and the inhabitants use boats to pass from one village to another. The cottages, which are painted blue, green or black, with pointed gables, and roofed with red tiles, are all exactly alike and possess only a ground floor built on high piles.

A Novel Time Glass.

"During a trip which I took through the West Indies several years ago," said a traveler, "I saw a sight in one of the villages which brought the old proverb, 'Necessity is the mother of invention,' forcibly to my mind. In the front of one of the houses on a veranda stood a sentry whose business it was to keep the time for the village by means of a primitive sandglass. Two bottles were firmly tied together, mouth to mouth, and fixed in a wooden frame, made to stand in reversible positions.

"A quantity of black sand ran from one bottle into the other in just half an hour, and when the upper bottle was empty the frame was reversed. Twelve short sticks marked with notches from 1 to 12 were hung upon a string, and a hook was placed between the stick bearing the number of notches corresponding to the hour last struck and the one to be struck next. The sentry announced the time by striking the hours on a large gong."

Camels in War.

The camel is a good soldier. It may be stupidity, and it may be bravery, but a camel is as steady under fire as a tower. The Persians mounted small cannon on the backs of their camels and called them zambwahs, or little wasps. This fashion was adopted in India, and after the battle of Sobraon 2,000 of the artillery camels were captured. In the Indian mutiny the British had a camel corps of 150 beasts, and on the back of each camel sat a Scotch highlander in his kilt.

In 1878 the British used camels against the Afghans, and the government paid for 50,000 camels that died in those campaigns. Many of these were driven to death by their owners in order that they might claim the government bounty. There was also a camel corps which did good service in the Sudan war against the mahdi.

The Deadliest Poison.

Cyanide of potassium and hydrocyanic or prussic acid are considered by most people to be about the most poisonous of known substances. This is an error. They are the most rapidly acting of all poisons, but not the most potent. One drop of pure prussic acid placed in the eye of a large dog will kill it within two seconds, and such a dose will kill a man. But there is an alkaloid in aconite root called pseudaconitine, one three-hundredth part of a grain of which will kill a moderate sized animal. This is the deadliest poison known, being 300 times as toxic as prussic acid.

Kingston is exercised by the refusal of Rev. Canon Starr, chaplain of the Princess of Wales Rifles, to accompany that regiment to Syracuse, N.Y., on the ground that the trip was a desecration of the Sabbath. He also inveighed in the pulpit against the growing tendency to disregard the Lord's Day.

In all 128 survivors of the disaster to the Danish steamship Norge, in the North Atlantic, on Tuesday, 28th ult., are reported to have been rescued. This would make the total of missing 656. The wreck appears to have been one of the worst in history, though the officers and crew behaved with great heroism. About 200 children were drowned and in some cases whole families have been wiped out. There were dreadful scenes as the vessel went down to her doom.

A Full Menagerie of Names.

A story is told of a Cherokee woman who married six times and never got out of the animal line. When she was a girl she was known as Miss Mollie Panther. She married an Indian named Coon, and when that gentleman was transferred to the happy hunting ground she soon became Mrs. Fox. The Fox did not last always, and when he entered the last chase the widow married a mild, placid man named Mule, who never had any kick coming till he harnessed up to draw his load across the great divide. After a period of mourning the widow again entered the realms of matrimonial bliss and became Mrs. Wolf, and when his scalp went to the Great Father, along with his corporeal remains, she became the wife of a man named Tiger, and when Mr. Tiger changed his stripes for a pretty white robe in the great beyond she selected another husband of the name of Rabbit.

History of Child Slavery.

It was not until 1819 that factory work for children under nine was prohibited or that children between nine and sixteen were not allowed to work more than twelve hours a day; and it was not until 1802 that the law required an apprentice to be provided with two suits of clothing, one of which was to be new each year. Notwithstanding this partial protection, when Mrs. Trollope wrote the "Factory Boy" in 1840 it was illustrated by pictures of ragged and emaciated children which would now be regarded only as gross exaggerations of the truth, but which then produced no adverse comment and were perhaps as influential in reforming the abuses they displayed as was "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in calling attention to the evils of slavery.

Some Superstitions.

To break a mirror to many persons indicates the death of the person who last looked into the mirror or some serious injury to that person. The savage tribes of nearly every country believed that striking either the image or the shadow of any person meant an injury to that person. They believed that the image or the shadow represented the spirit of a person, and many are the tales told of magicians who inflicted the injuries on persons they inflicted on their images. To drop a stone into water where the image of a person was reflected meant death or some dire disaster.

A Queer Remedy.

Francis Grose, whose work on the popular superstitions of the day was compiled in the year 1787, says: "The peasants of Suffolk have a simple and never failing cure for ague. It is this: Write the word 'Abaca bara' in form as shown below, place it in a nutshell and wear the same about the neck." The form is here given:

A B A C A D A B A R A
B A C A D A B A R
A C A D A B A

The Difference.

At one time there were two members of the house of commons named Montagu Matthew and Matthew Montagu—the former a tall, handsome man and the latter a little man. During a session of parliament, the speaker having addressed the latter as the former, Montagu Matthew observed that it was strange he should make such a mistake, as there was as great a difference between them as between a horse chestnut and a chestnut horse.

Willing to Oblige.

"I may as well tell you, young man," said Miss Spooner's father, "that I always close up the house and turn out all lights by 10 o'clock."

"Don't bother tonight, sir," replied Jack Nervy. "I'll attend to that for you."

Matinee Accessories.

George—Did you have a good time? Gertie—Oh, lovely, lovely! George—Was the play good? Gertie—No, but I had on my new hat and had a box of delicious caramels with me.

Her Endurance.

"How can you scold all the time?" was asked of the woman with five stepchildren and an indolent husband.

"I can't just explain it, but I know that I'm blessed with wonderful powers of endurance."

Both Satisfied.

"I'm satisfied," said the angry tailor, "that you don't intend to pay me this money."

"All right," chuckled the happy debtor. "If you're satisfied, I am."

TORONTO STREET, TORONTO

Crazed by Study.

Fort Erie, June 30.—Mrs. Fannie Wellbeloved has confessed to the shooting of Dr. William Douglas at his home in Fort Erie, Ont., on Wednesday. The woman was disappointed in her ambition to become a celebrated writer and under the delusion that she had been robbed of her ability to write by the hypnotic influence of Dr. Douglas. Mrs. Wellbeloved is 38 years old. Her maiden name was Scott, and she has published some verses signed Fanny Scott. She was born at Oakville. Her father died when she was a child, and left her mother sufficient means to give the girl a high school education in Toronto, where she has some relatives. Her husband, whom she married fifteen years ago in Toronto, is John Wellbeloved, a carpenter. They moved to Fort Erie six years ago. In October, 1900, they moved back to Toronto, and in the following June went to Buffalo. She opened a small confectionary store on the West Side, which she conducted for a year, while her husband worked in a lithographing establishment. In April, 1901, they returned here. They have three children. Mrs. Wellbeloved did her household duties by day and her studies and literary work by night, depriving herself of much sleep. About five years ago she began to complain of trouble with her head, and went to Dr. Douglas for treatment. The trouble grew worse in her absence from Fort Erie, and the family had not been back in the village long again when she began to talk of having been robbed by the doctor of her intellectual powers. One night last winter she made an attempt to stab Dr. Douglas. She will appear again on July 6th on the charge of attempting to kill. Mrs. Wellbeloved obtained access to Dr. Douglas's house on Wednesday by the pretence that one of her children was sick, and after she had shot the doctor she went back home and quietly went to bed, hiding the revolver in the mattress. Dr. Douglas is not wounded dangerously, the bullets lodged in his face and arm having been extracted without difficulty.

It is reported from Sydney, B.C., today that the strike may soon be settled, the company granting an increase to the lowest paid men. Two hundred militia arrived from Halifax yesterday.
