"Mighty England."

We haven't read the book and don't intend to, didn't note the author's name and will not enquire, but the title, "Mighty England," commends itself to us as mighty good.

Whether one hates England or loves her, if one has perception one will be aware of the truth that "mighty" hits England, as "Glorious" does France, as "beautiful" does Italy, as "studious" does Germany, as "proud" does Spain. Mighty is exactly what England is—mighty tyrant as her enemies believe, or mighty righteousness as her own leaders proclaim.

If England went down in blood and shame to-morrow, the nine centuries she has lived since Hastings's fateful day would compass one epic of might that old Rome cannot match, nor any other in all the tide of time. For a hundred years in the middle ages the English dominated France. For a hundred years they harried Spain. They overthrew Napoleon. They conquered India. They built an empire of more peoples than has ever been subjected to one crown. They seized the seas and have created a world-wide commerce.

They have created liberty and self-government in the modern world. Except for Americans, they are the one people in all the tide of time who have had the best faculty of self-government. There is a Cromwell in their history, but no Napoleon, no Bismarck.

The greatest poet of all literature was an Englishman. Those two men of science who have most profoundly influenced the world, Sir Isaac Newton and Charles Darwin, were Englishmen. But why go on? Every body knows the story of English achievement.

Mighty England! The roll of her victories on land includes Cressy, Poictiers, Agincourt, Blenheim, Ramillies, Salamanca, Waterloo, Plassy, Assaye, and on sea the defeat of the Spanish Armada, St. Vincent, the Nile, Trafalgar. The foes she has defeated include Philip II., Louis XIV., Bonaparte.

Her literature, as Macaulay said, as French critics admit, is the greatest and most extensive since the Greek. Her science has greater names than that of Germany, or France. Her manufactures, invention, discovery, ships, are the envy of her rivals.

It is good to hear the truth frankly uttered once in a while.—Minneapolis Journal.

"Starve the Flies"--The New Slogan.

The common fly as a carrier of disease has been receiving much attention from sanitary experts in the last few years. Last year "Swat the Fly" was the slogan all over Canada. This year there is something more rational, "Starve the Fly." The way to do this is to get rid of the dirt, and a further improvement is to get rid of it before the flies hatch about your dwelling. Gordon Hewitt, of the Dominion Experimental Farm, pointed out, in a recent issue of the Ottawa Free Press, that from April 15th to 25th the hibernating flies that remain from last autumn in the cracks of kitchens and stables come out and lay their eggs. It takes three weeks at this time of the year for these eggs to hatch out. Later on the maggot, with higher temperatures, the hatching time of the eggs is considerably reduced. Flies lay their eggs in decomposing organic matter, usually in the manure. Throughout the part winter in stables, backyard, vacant lots, etc. Any disturbance of the dirt will lead to the eggs. One food of that carried away in time may mean the non-appearance of tens of thousands of flies in a week here or there.

LEARNED TO DRAW IN BUSY STREET

Famous Canadian Painter Got His First Lesson From Pavement Artist in London

Prominent among Canadian artists is Mr. Frederick S. Challoner and behind his rise into the front rank of painters in this western hemisphere lies a world of romance worthy of the great days of the past, when the homeless hero went forth penniless into the world with nothing but a stout heart, a strong will and an unconquerable resolve to make his mark.

Mr. Challoner learned his first lessons in painting on the pavement in a busy street in Stratford, London, where an ex-seaman by his artistic skill drew forth from the passers-by a scanty shower of coppers from the busy throng of workmen who then as now passed and repassed in this industrial centre of Britain. Challoner watched with great interest as the old seaman rapidly sketched the Tay bridge disaster, the bombardment of Alexander by the British fleet, and kindred subjects, watched while the well-known facial lines of Gladstone and Disraeli found a place on the city's pavement.

Came to Canada

A little later the British boy made his way to Canada and within a few hours found a niche as office boy in a Toronto place of business. That is nearly thirty years ago, and during practically all those years the artist of to-day has been plying his profession in one form or another, first with amateurish effort with little or no result until to-day he occupies a leading position in the Dominion in the field of mural and portrait painting. Soon after his arrival on this side of the Atlantic Mr. Challoner secured a post on the artists's department of a lithographic establishment, and in the years passed here, such progress was made that he decided to establish himself as a painter.

Ability Recognized

Fellow artists, men and women in the city quickly recognized his genius and worth and he was made a member of the Ontario Society of Artists, an institution which still exists. He was elected an associate of the Royal Canadian Academy of Art, and finding a fruitful as well as a profitable field in the land of his adoption Mr. Challoner has continued to reside on this continent, save when in pursuit of local colouring for European and other eastern work.

American Teachers in the West.

London Truth sees peril to Canada and the Empire in the employment of American teachers in the Canadian West. It says that, owing to the dearth of Canadian teachers the Alberta Government is considering the recognition of American certificates. What Truth asks, "would be the effect of introducing these American teachers in moulding the citizenship of Canada? Patriotism of the Canadian variety is characteristic of the American public. School teachers, with the worship of the Stars and Stripes fired into them, would be most effective missionaries of foreign nationhood. You can hardly expect children to learn patriotism from foreign teachers."

Fred Salter, European manager of the Grand Trunk, in replying to the article, says: "The well-educated American who immigrates into Canada becomes the most Canadian of all. Twenty-seven years ago I used to send out from Ontario two hundred people a year to Iowa, Minnesota and Dakota. Nowadays their children are returning to the land their parents left and they are more Canadian than those who have never been away."

Smallpox in Waterdown.

Hamilton Spectator.

What may develop into a serious epidemic of smallpox has been discovered in Waterdown, and the services of Dr. McLenahan, district officer of health, and the local board of health, have been enlisted.

An order has already been issued for the vaccination of children attending the Waterdown schools. Those who have not been vaccinated within the last seven years must submit to fresh inoculation. Those whose parents do not believe in vaccination must stay away from school until all danger is passed.

Dr. McLenahan is not sure where the disease originated. When he investigated yesterday, he discovered one case, and ordered a strict quarantine. This morning, another case was discovered.

An Old Joke But a Good One.

A Scotch farmer, who had gone to the laird to pay his rent was complaining about the bad season, the poor crops, and the small prices he was getting for his grain, and hinting that a reduction in the rent would be acceptable. "But, John," said the laird, "you were saying that all your crops had been poor this season. I have been told, however, that you had a very good crop of beans." "A guid crop!" ejaculated the farmer. "Mon, laird, if ilka beanstalk had been a piper he wudna hae heard his next neebor playin'!"

Magistrate Sent for Trial.

Oshawa, Ont., May 1.—Wm. J. Watson, police magistrate, was this afternoon committed to stand trial on a charge of bigamy. He will appear at Whitby on June 10, or may, at his option, appear before the county judge in the meantime. Mr. Crysdale, J.P., said: "In view of the evidence, I cannot do otherwise than send the defendant for trial."

WHIRLWIND COURSE OF PARIS BANDITS

How a Gang of Criminals Operated in the French Capital—The Real Villain in the Case

Four Parisian bandits were sent to the guillotine, and another batch went to prison. Carroux, one of the most desperate of the desperate band, committed suicide in his cell after being sentenced to prison. Three others died "with their boots on" in resisting arrest. The demand of Paris that she be avenged upon the murderers who terrorized her for more than a year was thus met. At the trial it was made reasonably plain that these twenty odd criminal or desperate men, or crazy men, and the equal number of women who loved them or protected them or helped them, according to the intelligence of the women, were inspired by a woman. Her name describes her. It is Rirette, which means Little Laugh. She is always laughing, is Anne Maitrejean; laughing at the judge, at the crowds in the court room, at the prisoners, at law and everything else.

Breeding the Bandits

She and her husband, Kilbalchiche, provided the centre round which the terrible bandits performed their death's dance. How they first met the leaders of the bandits is not clear, but it is plain that Garnier, Carrouxy, Dieudonne, Monier and Raymond used to visit Rirette and her husband and discuss anarchy with them. They were, in fact, taught anarchy by the slim laughing woman, and after they had mastered the general principles, which were very agreeable to them, Rirette pointed out that they might put them in practice very easily. She taught them the "individual taking back" notion, as the Anarchists call it, or robbery, as the law calls it, and as they needed money, and were opposed to working hard for it, and had no such ideas of right and wrong as most people entertain there was nothing to check them but the absence of a good plan. It was Raymond who looked at the problem from a purely scientific point of view, and concluded that use should be made of these inventions of science, the automobile and the automatic pistol. Before the bandits became the automobile bandits, however, they committed several burglaries to acquire the the necessary technical experience. According to the diary of Garnier, these jobs netted them from $60 to $80 each. Then at the right moment, after the brilliant idea of Raymond's had been discussed, Rirette introduced to them Bonnot, the incomparable chauffeur. Having Bonnot and the automatic pistols, the next thing was to secure the car.

Crimes of the Bandits

They marked down a likely car and stole it. Then they hid it for a week, and in the meantime picked out their victim, who was a bank runner, with $1,100 in cash and securities amounting to $64,000 in his satchel. They shot him down in the street and escaped with the plunder. The abandoned auto was found next day at Dieppe. There was no clue to the robbers, who separated, some going to Belgium to negotiate the securities and the robbers returning to Paris. Their next robberies were committed upon stores dealing in firearms, and they secured a valuable haul of pistols, rifles and ammunition. Other crimes followed with stirring rapidity. With Bonnot at the wheel of a powerful car it was possible to murder a man in the morning and in the afternoon assassinate another man a couple of hundred miles away. The bandits appeared to be without fear, and the knowledge that they would rather kill than not helped them out of many a tight hole.

Their reign of terror lasted probably fifteen months. Well equipped with money, with disguises and false documents and passports and accomplices, they eluded pursuit for so long, but at length the coils were tightened round them. An indiscreet letter led to the capture of a couple, and supplied a clue to some of the others. The time came when they were known, when it was no longer a matter of hunting men the police would not recognize unless they saw them committing a crime. The cordon closed in. Several were captured, others were shot down. A regiment of soldiers shelled the house where Bonnot turned at bay, and he was destroyed. When Paris saw the others in the dock, she was amazed. They were all mere youngsters, none of them out of the twenties. They are of two kinds, the "tough" and the "dude," and of the two the dude was the deadlier. Most remarkable of all was Rirette, who taught them crime and incited them to murder. She was permitted to go her laughing way.

Mexican Idea of News

Mexico, despite its revolutions, is one of the most conservative countries in the world. Few of the poorer people can read or write, and the "public newspaper reader" makes a comfortable living by going the round of the drinking places of the city and reciting the news of the day. News, however, is generally stale before it reaches print in a Mexican paper. "Good news," said one Mexican editor to a traveler, "is like good wine; it improves with age. It is always better to hold news over for a week. If it is true, we get more facts; if it proves false, why should we print it?"

Ended Appropriately

The Scottish National Song Society Conference in Edinburgh was in a slanging mood. The Free Church hymn-book was designated the most awful conglomeration of nonsense, and the bagpipe stigmatised as the instrument of barbarians. Appropriately enough, the conference wound up with a lament.

ONTARIO WOMAN'S FORTUNE

Freed From That Weak, Languid, Always Tired Feeling, by Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

Thessalon, Ont.—"I cannot speak too highly of your medicine. When my appetite is poor and I have that weak, languid, always tired feeling, I get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it builds me up, gives me strength, and restores me to perfect health again. It is truly a blessing to women, and I cannot speak highly enough of it. I take pleasure in recommending it to others."—Mrs. ANNIE CAMERON, Thessalon, Ont.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

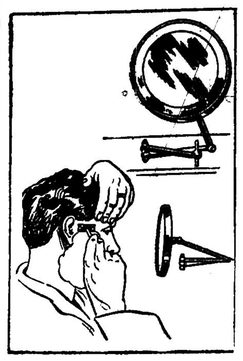
There are probably hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over 30 years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering. If you are sick and need such a medicine, why don't you try it?

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

AN ADJUSTABLE MIRROR

Can be Moved to Give Reflection at Any Angle Desired

An adjustable mirror that, while it is designed primarily as a shaving mirror, can be used by women on their dressing tables with equal convenience is a new invention. The glass is attached to a support that consists of three arms so connected that they have five joints and can be lengthened, shortened, raised or lowered in an instant with one hand. A universal joint on the back of the mirror permits of its movement independent of the angle of the arms. A small bracket that comes with the outfit is screwed to wall or window frame and the mirror can be inserted in this bracket or removed from it in an instant by means of a short rod on the free end of the last arm. These arms can be turned about to form legs to support the mirror on a table.



USED ON WALL OR TABLE.

The Cold Pack

A cold pack is a fine home substitute for a Turkish bath when such treatment is indicated. It is an ideal way to get up a good, healthy reaction when the circulation is sluggish.

Wrap the patient, naked, in a sheet wrung out of cold water, then wrap patient and sheet in several blankets or in a blanket and a quilt. Swathe him like a mummy. Presently, he will be as warm as toast. After an hour or two the pack should be removed, taking care that the patient is not chilled. A good rub down and then a long sleep will finish the job.

PAULINE JOHNSTON

The memory of Pauline Johnston, the Indian poetess will always be a sweet fragrance to the people of Canada, white man and Indian. She was the daughter of an Indian chief of the Mohawk tribe, near Brantford, where she was born on March 10, 1862. Pauline Johnston inherited the red man's love of the drama, while her literary tendencies may be ascribed to the family of her English mother, Emily Howells, through whom she was related distantly to William Dean Howells. Miss Howells came from Ohio to the Mohawk Reserve with her sister, the wife of a Church of England missionary, and, meeting the handsome young chief, they fell in love. The little roughcast house in which Pauline Johnson was born still stands, and in the years to come should become a literary shrine for lovers of Canadian poetry. Pauline was carefully educated by private tuition and in the Brantford model school. Early in life she began to write verse, but the world's knowledge of her dates from an evening in 1892, when at the age of thirty she appeared at a literary evening of the Toronto Young Men's Liberal Club, and, along with several other poets, read selections from her own works.

Her best poems, the ones in which there is the greatest life, are those on Indian subjects, canoeing, Canadian scenery, etc. Into her poems of this class, The Death Cry, A Cry from an Indian Wife, As Red Men Die, The Idler, In the Shadows, In April, she has thrown all her heart. They possess an irresistible passion and ardor. Miss Johnson visited England in 1894, and while there published "the White Wampum," a collection of about two-score poems.

Building Extraordinary

A remarkable engineering feat was accomplished recently at a factory in Pennsylvania, when a steel roof weighing 600 tons was lifted from one of the mills to a height of 40 feet above the perpendicular sides of the mill, 35 feet high. This was done in less than four hours. Artisans immediately began to build the sides of the mill to meet the suspended roof, which was held in air, mainly by cables suspended by large steam cranes.

PERILS AMONG FALSE BRETHREN

St. Paul's Experiences Duplicate the Master's.

Jesus' Footstep Followers Wounded in the House of Their Friends—The Philosophy of the Matter—How to Receive Such Experiences—Why They Are Permitted—The Results They Serve.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Ottawa, Ont., March 30.—Pastor Russell, who since his last visit has many friends here, arrived again this morning. As usual, the largest auditorium was engaged for him. We report one of his addresses, from St. Paul's words: "Perils among false brethren." (2 Corinthians 11:26.) He said:

St. Paul was fully devoted to the Master and His cause. His faithfulness brought many trying experiences. He served Christ to such an extent that many counted him a fool. Those who opposed his teachings often raised a tumult and blamed him for it, in order to bring him into disrepute, hinder his service and forward their own interests. This at times brought him to prison, and once to death's door.

Nevertheless, he rejoiced in all such experiences. None of these things moved him from faithfulness to his Master, whose servants he had persecuted before his eyes were opened. He recounts various perils from robbers, from Jews, from heathen, in the city, in the wilderness, on the sea. He winds up the list with the words of our text, "perils among false brethren."

The question arises, "Were these sufferings deserved?" Surely not! St. Paul was a noble character and bore the Message of God's grace in Christ. Then comes the question, "If his sufferings were not punishments, what were they?" We reply that, like the Master's, they were evidences of loyalty to God and of the darkness of the world, which led men to persecute him.

Darkness Hates the Light.

The Master declared that He stood for the principles of light, righteousness, truth; while Satan stands for darkness, blindness, superstition. All children of the light must be uncompromising in attitude toward wrong. Therefore the world hates them and says all manner of evil against them falsely. Yea, men will feel that they serve God when they slay the righteous, whether literally, as with Jesus and St. Paul, or by "shooting out arrows, even bitter words," the more popular present day method.

But some will say, "Times have changed! To-day our ministers are reverenced. No one thinks of persecuting them. All men speak well of them. Those not spoken well of today must in some way be unworthy."

How strange that we should forget! In Jesus' day did any traduce the chief priests and Pharisees? Were they not spoken of highly and reverenced? But the Master and His disciples were not popular. According to their own record they were styled "the filt and offscouring of the earth." The Master said that whoever persecuted them would feel that he did God service. As Jesus told some in His day, "Ye garnish the sepulchres of those whom your fathers slew, yet ye do their works." So to-day many extol the Lord and the Apostles and denounce their persecutors, while similarly they persecute.

The Master was a Jew. The Jews were His brethren according to the flesh. Yet they hated Him without a cause, persecuted Him and finally crucified Him. But St. Paul lived after Pentecost, and had Christian brethren, begotten of the Holy Spirit, fellow-members of the Body of Christ. Jesus had none such. "Of the people there were none with Him." The nearest approximation was Judas.

St. Paul knew the bitterness of persecution from false brethren—the climax of all his perils. We may be sure that such experiences were most difficult to bear; for they came from brethren of the closest possible relationship—fellow-members of the Body of Christ.

The Godly Suffer Persecution.

All faithful followers of Jesus have persecutions. These come from every quarter; but none are more cruel than those from Christian brethren. Disputes between Christians have been very bitter. History demonstrates this fact. Heretic became the most obnoxious word in the dictionary. Nothing was too bad to do against a heretic. The persecuting brethren were sometimes one denomination, sometimes another.

Thank God for the Advancement made in Christian sympathy! No longer can civilized people take pleasure in tortures, burnings, etc. The general sentiment no longer appreciates or tolerates physical torture. But who can dispute that mental torture is equally severe? In our day there are more refined ways of persecuting, torturing, etc., open to false brethren.

Evil-speaking, evil-surmising, slanders, ambiguous suggestions, etc., can be applied to the followers of Jesus to-day. All who take such a course are sharers with the malefactors, even though they do not indulge in physical torture.

What shall we say of the false brethren who do such things. Undoubtedly the Master still agrees with St. John's declaration, "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murederer and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life." (1 John 3:15.) Surely none with a murderous condition of heart could be suitable for joint-heirship with our Lord in His Kingdom.
