PALERMO.

On Wednesday, Dec. 27th, Mrs. H. Inglehart and daughters entertained the young ladies of the community at an afternoon tea, Misses Ruth and Margaret being at home for holidays.

The Woman's Institute met at the home of Miss Book, on Thursday, Dec. 28th. The proposed University Extension course of lectures was postponed for another year, on account of it being late in the season, also failing to secure a lecturer for a suitable evening. Mrs. Geo. Atkins spoke on public school conditions, with the result that a resolution was made that the Institute ladies hereafter attend the annual school board meetings. The program, in charge of the young ladies, was: Chorus, "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing," reading by Miss Margaret Inglehart, violin selection by Miss Myrtle Riggs, duet, Misses Marion and Edna Inglehart, reading by Miss Ruth Inglehart.

The social evening held in the Methodist school room on Friday evening was well attended. The debate, "Resolved that the natural resources of Canada are greater than those of the United States." The affirmative was taken by Miss Osborne and Mr. Jennings, of Bronte, the negative by Miss Ruth Inglehart and Mr. Boaker, of Palermo, with Mrs. Geo. Atkins, Mr. Darlington and Mr. Fairbrother as referees. The decision was given in favor of the negative.

We are glad to report A. Galbraith, who has been ill for some time, improving under the care of Dr. Bremner.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Cullingham celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary on Thursday evening, when a number of their intimate friends dined with them.

MARRIED.

MILLAR-SPENCE.

A pretty wedding was solemnized on Dec. 20th at one o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F.E. Spence, Freeman, when their only daughter, May, became the bride of Raymond Millar. She was given in marriage by her father and looked pretty in a gown of white satin with overdress of silk embroidered lace. She also wore the veil and orange blossoms worn by her mother. She carried a bouquet of sunset roses and wore a necklace of gold set with pearls and amethysts, the gift of the groom. They were married under an arch of silver and white decorations by the Rev. Mr. Lowe, Campbellville. The bride's mother played the Wedding March. The happy couple left on a short honeymoon, amid showers of confetti and good wishes. The presents were many and good, testifying to the popularity of the young couple.

Fascinating Stories.

Two fascinating stories of adventure and romance will commence this month in The Family Herald and Weekly Star, of Montreal. "The King's Arrow," by H. A. Cody, takes one back to stirring times in the picturesque days of the Acadians and the United Empire Loyalists. "The Yellow Flower," by Thompson Cross, is a thrilling tale of adventure in the Far East. These two stories alone are worth double the subscription price of The Family Herald and Weekly Star, of Montreal, for a full year. Subscriptions sent in immediately will catch the opening instalments.

IRELAND.

Seumas MacManus Speaks Well of "Distressful Country."

A more pleasant picture of Ireland of the present day than is afforded by the cables is given by Seumas MacManus. Only the high spots of conflicts and crimes are usually sent over the wires, and they are doubtless bad enough, but Mr. MacManus writes in the New York Times of a pleasanter Ireland as seen on a return visit.

Ireland is very much more prosperous than it used to be. This not only holds young people in the country, but has stimulated marriage. Whereas Ireland, through stress of circumstances, had been falling into depressed bachelordom, the people now marry early and often, to speak colloquially. Instead of waiting to the age of about 35 to marry, they now take wives in the early 20's. "So the blithe fairies who have been disappearing from the Irish hillsides are covering them thickly again."

The national bird of Ireland, Mr. MacManus says, should be the stork. A recent census shows the turning of the tide of the Irish race. In three-quarters of a century the population fell from 9,000,000 to 4,460,000. This dreadful drain has suddenly stopped and the tide has turned. The great war has improved the physical condition of the young men, and the visitor found them far advanced in walk, in air, in neatness of dress, and in natural ease of manner. Young men carry themselves with an erectness and independence far away from either "smartness" or swagger. Young women have a quiet, easy bearing which becomes their engaging shyness of look.

"The Irishman used to have the name of being a drinker," says Mr. MacManus. "From my observation and from talks I had with people who know, I should say that at the present time the Englishman and Scotsman are running neck and neck in the bottle race, and the Irishman is nowhere. The drink reform had been progressing for twenty years, but it was much speeded by the Anglo-Irish fight of the last half-dozen years, during which the avoidance of drink was with the boys, a point of honor as well as a religious tenet."

WINTER ECZEMA

KEEN wintry weather brings a host of skin troubles. Cold-sores, chapped hands, unsightly face-sores and blotches, become a source of discomfort and annoyance. To end the trouble and make your skin clear, healthy and flexible, give the face, arms and hands, a nightly dressing with pure herbal Zam-Buk.

Zam-Buk instantly soothes the smarting irritation, it kills disease germs, and quickly heals all soreness, roughness and chafing which, neglected, often develops into eczema or other chronic skin disease. Use also Zam-Buk Medicinal Soap and enjoy real skin health.

Mrs. Henry Amey, 42, Lyall Avenue, Toronto, says:—"My daughter's face and neck were a mass of eczema. Her doctor prescribed treatment for over two months, but to little avail. I was about to call in a skin specialist when I heard of Zam-Buk treatment rescuing other sufferers from this dread disease. So I got a box of Zam-Buk and a tablet of Zam-Buk Medicinal Soap. The Spinning Top.

Everyone who has ever whirled a string to which a stone is tied must have noticed the strong "pull" as the stone tried to get away. Every part of a spinning top is trying to fly away from the center of the top in exactly the same way. This pull is called "centrifugal force"—the tendency to fly from the centre.

As each particle of the top has an equal pull, none of them can upset the balance of any of the others, and so we get a balanced force.

So long as this force is strong enough—that is, so long as the spin lasts—it counteracts the ordinary power of gravity, which has to confine itself to the peg of the top, the only point actually touching the earth.

When the top slows down, the centrifugal force relaxes, gravity comes into its own again—and the top falls over.

A Foregone Conclusion.

The argument started with the soup, progressed during the fish, swelled visibly when the joint came, until at dessert husband and wife were so thoroughly indignant that they could continue no longer. "I don't know what would happen, John, if you ever agreed with me on any subject," she finally said plaintively. He looked at her, and sighed, "I'd be wrong," he said, "I'd be wrong!"

Picking a Site.

Rhases, Persian physician of the tenth century, picked out the site for a hospital in Bagdad by hanging pieces of meat in different parts of the city in order to find the place least favorable to putrefaction.

Save Your Sight.

Though our sight is one of the most precious senses we possess, how very little real care we take of it.

Who is there that does not read while traveling by train? The vibration is very harmful to the eyes if they are made to work; so let them rest in the train, and save your sight for reading at home.

It is a great mistake to read by firelight. It is far too unsteady a light and causes undue strain on the eyes.

A dim light means eye-strain, so does reading in bed, especially if you have only a candle to see by. Though reading in bed may help you to go to sleep, it is bound to affect your sight eventually if you practice it regularly.

Staring at bright lights is another fruitful source of trouble. You have only to look at the sun for a moment or two, as you know, to be blinded temporarily. Do this frequently, and a permanent disability will result.

People who overfeed, or take their meals irregularly, are asking for eye trouble later on; so are those who sit about with damp feet—the cold they thing they're in for is only one of the minor evils to which they are liable.

The best position for reading is to hold the body erect and let the light come over the left shoulder, if possible. If you use your eyes much with the head bent, or leaning forward, too great a quantity of blood will flow to the eyes, and they will begin to ache.

Place your bed with the head towards the window, then you won't have to stare at the light when you wake.

Old Cecil Tradition Has Again Made Itself Felt In Politics of England

Spiritualists of Britain, who are hunting for proof of their theories have a matchless opportunity presented to them through the composition of the Bonar Law Cabinet. If their beliefs are well founded they ought to have little difficulty in finding the spirit of a most distinguished statesman hovering in the vicinity of No. 10 Downing Street, London. No less a personage, in fact, than the great Lord Salisbury.

The British Cabinet represents nothing so much as the return of the old Cecil tradition of imperial and home policies. Two figures stand out in it—the Marquis of Salisbury, son of the Prime Minister who gave Africa to England, and Lord Curzon, the favorite protege of Salisbury, picked and educated by him to carry on the Cecil tradition.

In many crises for the British Empire in the last three centuries the Cecil family has furnished Premiers or other statesmen to help add territories to that political organization or save it from disaster. Lord Salisbury, who died in 1903 after a long lease of power, left behind a body of trained young men to carry on.

His three sons were all educated in foreign affairs and the intricacies of Government. His nephew, Arthur James Balfour, was pushed ahead of them because he showed high aptitude for statesmanship. His private secretary, now Lord Curzon, was given an insight into all the ways of British imperial diplomacy and statecraft and the Cecil method of handling such things.

Balfour was given to philosophical doubt and ended up as a supporter of Lloyd George, the Liberal. Lord Hugh Cecil, although a Unionist, has shown signs at times of a highly progressive spirit. Lord Robert Cecil has turned world reformer and has often insisted on trying to upset British home and imperial tradition.

Two remained faithful to the teachings of the great master—the present Lord Salisbury, head of the house, and Lord Curzon. They have been Tories of the old school, unshaken in a changing world. And they shine in the Bonar Law Cabinet, Lord Salisbury as the President of the Council, and Lord Curzon confirmed as head of the Foreign Office.

Covered Honest Heart.

A good story is told of Mr. "Jack" Jones, West Ham's Labor M.P.

On the occasion when he first sought the suffrages of the electors, one of his canvassers called at the house of a riverside laborer, and in persuasive tones said, "I hope you will vote for Mr. Jones."

Apparently, however, the workman was a little bit tainted with snobbishness. "Mr. Jones!" he echoed in doubtful cadence; "why wot would 'e look like in Parliament? Look 'ow shabby 'e dresses. Look at 'is trousers, for instance."

"Ah, well," sighed the canvasser, "it may be true that his trousers are a bit shabby, but," he added, as a happy after-thought, hoping to secure a well-won vote, "they cover an honest heart, you know."
