Tweed to the complaint in the $6,000,000 suit, filed yesterday, denies that he did combine, agree or conspire with the late James Watson, as charged, and gives a general denial to all the allegations in the complaint. He also reserves his right to his appeal against the last adverse decision in his case, refusing him a stay of proceedings.

The Sugar Refiners—Bristow's Obnoxious Order.

The action of Secretary Bristow in reducing the drawback on refined sugars exported, which have already paid a duty as raw sugars of from $3 75 to $3 21 cents per hundred pounds, was the subject of general discussion among the refiners of the city yesterday, and considerable indignation was expressed. A meeting of the Committee appointed by the refiners on Thursday, was held yesterday, and it was decided to call a general meeting of the refiners of the country for the purpose of taking such action as may be thought necessary to protect their interests. A committee is to be appointed to confer with Secretary Bristow, and it is claimed that they will show that no reduction ought to be made; that the reduction on the amount retained by the Government to cover the expense of collecting import duties from 10 to 11 per cent, which was made last March does not give American refiners any undue advantage over their foreign competitors, but that it has duly operated to stimulate American trade until it is beginning to assume a more healthy condition.

There is an influence at work here in the interest of ex-Senator Chandler, of Michigan, for the position, but as the President remains very silent, there is no means of knowing who will be selected.

Congratulations from Foreign Powers.

The Government is advised that the prompt steps taken to compel the authorities at Tripoli to make reparation for the insult of the American Consul has called forth congratulations from representatives of allowing Governments stationed at that place. Gold in coarse scale is easily separated from gravel and sand.

A Magnificent Fight.

A MICHIGAN FARMER SUBDUING A VICIOUS BULL—PLUCK WINS THE BATTLE.

From the Hillsdale Business.

Mr. Elijah Pond of the township of Adams, had upon his farm a large, powerful and valuable bull, whose general reputation for propriety was bad, but had always acknowledged the mastery of Mr. Pond. He had been a terror to the help upon the farm, and had often hurried out of his neighbourhood those who had occasion to pass through the fields where he was grazing. Mr. Pond had frequently urged his labourers to not run from the animal, but to show no fear and he would not dare attack them, but they always took the part of discretion and got out of his way.

One evening last week Mr. Pond finished milking his cows in the barn-yard, and was returning to his house with a full pail of milk, when he had to pass by this bull He noticed that he shook his head sullenly, and looked vicious. But he passed along thinking nothing of it. He had not proceeded far when he heard the rapid step and low moaning bellowing of the animal close by him. He turned to catch the bull's horns with his hands so as to prevent his being gored, and was tossed into the air. He came down, pail, milk and all upon the animal's head, and was again thrown into the air, and as he fell he struck upon the opposite side of the fence. He was somewhat bruised and his clothes torn by the rough handling and the fall, but being a stout, muscular man, his impulse was to chatise the insolent beast. Accordingly he secured a heavy club, which had been a sledstake, and jumped over the fence into the yard. He was met with the bull, which, with horns poised, with head fixed, and stiffened neck, plunged at his unequal adversary as he approached. Mr. Pond struck him a terrific blow across his head, splintering and breaking the cudgel, but making no other impression on his bullship except to infuriate him.

The combat was getting fearful. The bull dashed upon Mr. Pond, who, without any means of defence, was in imminent, deadly peril. He sprang aside, caught the animal by one horn and one ear, and endeavoured to keep away from him, but was shaken about like a bundle of hay. He lost his hold, and a second time was tossed high into the air, and fell beyond the fence into the adjoining field. The maddened animal rushed at the fence, roared and bellowed, but Mr. Pond, undismayed, determined to master the field. He started to the house for his axe, and would have split open the bull's head rather than be conquered. But on his way he came upon a heavy three tined pitchfork. Seizing this he started again across the yard. More savage and more desperate than before, the beast met him, but Mr. Pond stood his ground, and as the bull approached he did not turn aside but struck him full in the face with the sharp tines of the fork, expecting to turn him back by the acute pain. But he was mistaken. The animal rushed at him and was bearing him against the fence, where he could have crushed him like a dry weed. Mr. Pond saw his peril and threw himself forward upon the neck and horns of the bull, and, clinging to his neck, threw up his feet so as to avoid the fence.

In this predicament he was tossed and flung about, and the fork was thrown from his grasp, and finally he, too, was unseated and fell over beside the animal. Fortunately, in his fall, his hand came upon the fork, which he caught, and with a full sense of the importance of using his power, he thrust the strong fork again and again into the side, flank and neck of the bull with all the force of his powerful arms. The heavy thrusts were quick and effective, and as the tempered tines twanged from the tough hide of the bull, the blood spurted from the deep incisions. Nerved by desperation and pain, Mr. Pond kept up his terrible warfare. The animal failed in every attempt to get him on his horns. Into his broad sides rained lightning shots of pointed steel, thicken, faster, deeper. The contest grew unequal. The strong beast bellowed now with pain. He held his head down for a moment, roared in utter discomfiture, and whirling upon his feet, ran bellowing down the yard.

Mr. Pond made his way to the house. He was met at the door by his wife; he was wet, with perspiration, bespatted with blood, lame, and almost naked, but so nerved by his spirit that after washing and resting a little time he went again to the yard. He had determined that there should be but one master on the premises, and notwithstanding the entreaties of his wife, he did not hesitate to go to the cattle ground unaided. He found his victory complete. The conquered, cowed, humbled animal ran from him like a whipped animal. The victory complete, the victor found himself more fearfully injured than he supposed, and it was several days before he again left the room.

It is understood that the friends of the bank are in a position to buy stock freely.
