Night and Morning.

CHAPTER VII.

Quickly, then, and as if by magic, the former confusion of his mind seemed to settle into distinct shapes of courage and resolve. "Yes," he muttered; "I will keep this night's appointment. I will learn the secret of these men's lives. In my inexperience and destitution, I have suffered myself to be [illegible] ... with subterfuge and ... my reckless ... paltering with my better ... be as I dread to find him — if he be linked in some guilty and hateful traffic with ... accomplices — I will —." He paused, for his heart whispered, "We have even so—the guilty man clothed and fed thee!" "I will," resumed his thought, in answer to his heart—"I will go on my knees to him to fly while there is yet time, to work—beg—starve—perish even—rather than lose the right to look man in the face without a blush, and kneel to his God without remorse!"

And as he thus ended, he felt suddenly as if he himself were restored to the perception of the joy of nature and the world around him; the night had vanished from his soul—he inhaled the balm and freshness of the air—he comprehended the delight which the liberal June was scattering over the earth—he looked above, and his eyes were suffused with pleasure at the smile of the soft blue skies. The morning became, as it were, a part of his own being, and he felt that as the world is fair, so in spite of evil God is good. He walked on—he forgot his rags. Why should he be ashamed? And thus, in the very flush of his sense and strange elation and elasticity of spirit, he came unawares upon a group of young men, lounging before the porch of one of the chief hotels in the Rue de Rivoli, wherein Wealth ... made their homes ... leaning ... up and down the ... young men were ... comments of approval ... the horses, especially ... which, was, indeed, of uncommon ... and great value. Even Morton, in whom the boyish passion of his earlier life yet existed, paused too turn his experienced and admiring eye upon the stately shape and pace of the noble animal, and as he did so, a name to well remembered came upon his ear.

"Certainly, Arthur Beaufort is the most enviable fellow in Europe!"

"Why, yes," said another of the young men; "he has plenty of money—is good-looking, devilish good natured, clever, and spends like a prince."

"Has the best horses!"

"The best luck at roulette!"

"The prettiest girls in love with him!"

"And no one enjoys it more. Ah! here he is!"

The group parted as a light, graceful figure came out of a jeweller's shop that adjoined the hotel, and halted gaily amongst the loungers. Morton's first impulse was to hurry from the spot; his second impulse arrested his step, and, a little apart, and half hid beneath one of the arches of the colonnade which adorns the street, the Outcast gazed upon the Heir. There was no comparison in the natural personal advantages of the two young men; for Philip Morton, despite all the hardships of his rough career, had now grown up and ripened into a rare perfection of form and feature. His broad chest, his erect air, his lithe and symmetrical length of limb, united, happily, the atributes of activity and strength; and though there was no delicacy of youthful bloom upon his dark cheek, and though lines which should have come later marred its smoothness with the signs of care and thought, yet an expression of intelligence and daring, equally beyond his years, and the evidence of hardy, abstemious, vigorous health, served to show to the full advantage the outline of features which, noble and regular, though stern and masculine, the artist might have borrowed for his ideal of a young Spartan arming for his first battle. Arthur, slight to feebleness, and with the paleness, partly of constitution, partly of ... excess, on his fair and clear complexion, had features far less symmetrical than his cousin; but what then? All that are bestowed by elegance of dress, the refinements of luxurious habit, the nameless grace that comes from a mind, and a manner polished—the one by literary culture, the other by social intercourse, invested the person of the heir with a fascination that rude nature alone ever fails to give. And about him there was a gaiety, an airiness of spirit, an atmosphere of enjoyment, which bespoke one who is in love with life.

"Why, this is lucky! I'm so glad to see you all!" said Arthur Beaufort, with that silver ringing tone, and charming smile, which are to the happy spring of man what its music and its sunshine are to the spring of earth. "You must dine with me at Verey's. I want something to rouse me to-day; for I did not get home from the Salon till four this morning."

"But you won?"

"Yes, Marsden. Hang it! I always win; I who could so well afford to lose; I'm quite ashamed of my luck!"

"It is easy to spend what one wins," observed Mr. Marsden, sententiously; "and I see you have been at the jeweller's! A present for Cecile? Well, don't blush, my dear fellow. What is life without women?"

"And wine?" said a second.

"And play?" said a third.

"And wealth?" said a fourth.

"And you enjoy them all! Happy fellow!" said a fifth.

The Outcast pulled his hat over his brows, and walked away.

"This dear Paris!" said Beaufort, as his eye carelessly and unconsciously followed the dark form retreating through the arches;—"this dear Paris! I must make the most of it while I stay! I have only been here a few weeks, and next week I must go."

"Pooh!—your health is better: you don't look like the same man."

"You think so, really? Still I don't know: the doctors say that I must either go to the German waters—the season is begun—or—"

"Or what?"

"Live less with such pleasant companions, my dear fellow! But as you say, what is life without——"

"Women!"

"Wine!"

"Play!"

"Wealth!"

"Ha! ha! Throw physic to the dogs: I'll none of it!"

And Arthur leaped lightly on his saddle, and as he rode gaily on, humming the favorite air of the last opera, the hoofs of his horse splashed the mud over a foot passenger halting at the crossing. Morton checked the fiery exclamation rising to his lips; and gazing after the brilliant form that hurried on towards the Champs Elysees, his eye caught the statues on the bridge, and a voice, as of a cheering angel, whispered again to his heart, "TIME, FAITH, ENERGY!"

The expression of his countenance grew calm at once, and as he continued his rambles it was with a mind that, casting off the burdens of the past, looked serenely and steadily on the obstacles and hardships of the future. We have seen that a scruple of conscience, or of pride, not without its nobleness, had made him refuse the importunities of Gawtrey for less sordid raiment; the same feeling made it his custom to avoid sharing the luxurious and dainty food with which Gawtrey was wont to regale himself. For that strange man, whose wonderful felicity of temperament and constitution rendered him, in all circumstances, keenly alive to the hearty and animal enjoyments of life, would still emerge, as the day declined, from their wretched apartment, and, trusting to his disguises, in which indeed he possessed a masterly art, repair to one of the better descrip-tion of restaurants and feast away his cares for the moment. William Gawtrey would not have cared three straws for the curse of Damocles. The sword over his head would not have spoiled his appetite! He had lately, too, taken to drinking much more deeply than he had been used to do—the fine intellect of the man was growing thickened and dulled; and this was a spectacle that Morton could not bear to contemplate. Yet so great was Gawtrey's vigour of health, that, after draining wines and spirits enough to have despatched a company of fox hunters, and after betraying, sometimes in uproarious glee, sometimes in maudlin self-bewailings, that he himself was not quite invulnerable to the thyrsus of the god, he would call on his energies, or especially before departing on those mysterious expeditions which kept him from home half, and sometimes all, the night, plunge his head into cold water—drink as much of the lymph as a groom would have shuddered to bestow on a horse—close his eyes in a doze for half an hour, and wake, cool, sober, and collected, as if he had lived according to the precepts of Socrates or Cornaro!

MATHUSHEK PIANOS.

EXCEL in volumes of tone.
EXCEL in voice-like quality of tone.
EXCEL in firmness and purity of tone.
EXCEL in durability and keeping in tune.
EXCEL for the concert-room.
EXCEL for teaching schools and seminaries.
EXCEL for the drawing-room.

These are broad assertions, but capable of proof, they are unlike any other in construction; all their peculiarities are points of excellence. Their illustrated and descriptive catalogue, which we send free to any address, explains in harmony with acoustics and mechanics all that is claimed for the Mathushek.

There are thousands of happy owners of Mathusheks willing to certify to their superior excellence. We have room here for but a few brief extracts;—

NEW YORK, Oct. 28, 1867.

We, the undersigned, Judges of Pianos at the Fair of the American Institute, after a careful examination of the Concert Grands do award to FREDERICK MATHUSHEK, the honour of making the best of this class of instruments then and there exhibited, or known to us elsewhere.

[Signed] EDWARD MOLLENHAUER, A. D. W. BESEMANN, M. J. GIANNETTI, CHARLES FRADEL.

MUSICAL CONSERVATORY, 802 Broadway, N.Y.

These Pianos must take the lead of all known instruments, and their peculiar construction renders them by far the most durable, and the least liable to get out of tune.

EUGENE J. MERRIAM.

Since the date of this Concert the Mathushek has been my favourite.

J. JAY WATSON, Watson's Conservatory of Music, New York.

No money would tempt me to banish it from my home.

D. SCHUYLER, Buffalo.

Mathushek superior to all others.

H. MOLLENHAUER, New York.

Mathushek has in reality taken a step in advance of all makers of Pianos in the world.

J. G. SHAW. Musical Critic, Saratoga.

I have heard nothing to equal it in sweetness of tone. Its notes are more like those of our sweetest singing bird, or those of the finest human voice, than any instrument notes I ever heard. We are delighted with our instrument. May you be blessed with great and deserved success.

Yours truly, SPENCER L. FINNEY, Pastor Second Presb. Church, Princeton, N.J.

The Mathushek Orchestra Square Grand Piano is brilliant, of wonderful power and melodious in tone.

ALFRED B. PEASE, Rochester.

I was fully convinced that the Mathushek was the crown of all.

H. BELLAIN.

My old tuner, who has taken care of my piano for the past ten years, says that the No. 10 Orchestral just received from you, is the best made and finest instrument in this city.

Yours, &c., D. M. SOMERVILLE, Cleveland, O.

Elm St. W. M. S. School, Toronto.

[We have great pleasure in stating that as an instrument to lead the singing in a S. School nothing can excel it. The tone is soft and full. The bass is grand, and when 600 voices are singing can be distinctly heard. Every note rings out clear as a bell.

WARRING KENNEDY, Superintendent, S. J. SUNTER, Pastor, SAMUEL FRISBY, Musical Conductor.

It has given my family the very highest satisfaction.

Rev. JOHN BRECIN, Barrie.

It has given entire satisfaction, and delighted all who have seen it.

THOMAS BEST, Toronto.

It gives the most complete satisfaction. For sweetness, smoothness and richness of tone we have never heard its equal.

J. O. EMMETT, M.D., Fonthill.

This is to certify that I purchased two of your Mathushek Pianos and find them all represented a first-class instrument. I consider them second to none.

GEO. TAYLOR, Don Mills.

The Mathushek I purchased from you three years ago has given the most perfect satisfaction. Everything you said in regard to them has been fully borne out. Quite a number are in use here, and all say they would not exchange their piano for any they have ever heard.

Burnett's Extracts

The superiority of these Extracts consists in their perfect purity and great strength. They are warranted free from the poisonous oils and acids which enter into the composition of many of the factitious fruit flavors now in the market. They are not only true to their names, but are prepared from fruits of the best quality, and are so highly concentrated that a comparatively small quantity only need be used.

JOSEPH BURNETT & CO., BOSTON, Proprietors.

BERKELEY, Sept., 1868.—Gentlemen, I feel it a duty I owe to you to express my gratitude for the great benefit I have derived by taking "Norton's Camomile Pills." I applied to your agent, Mr. Bell, Berkeley, for the above Pills, for wind in the stomach, from which I suffered excruciating pain for a length of time, having tried nearly every remedy prescribed, but without any benefit at all. After taking two bottles of your valuable pills, I was quite restored to my usual state of health. Please give it its publicity for the benefit of those who may thus be afflicted. I am, Sir, yours truly, HENRY ALLBASS. To the proprietors of "Norton's Camomile Pills."

FOWLER'S

Its success has been so universal that the proprietor guarantees a cure to those who use his medicine, or in case of failure to refund the money paid. Since it was first introduced he has received many thousands of testimonials, proving its efficacy for the cure of the awful diseases it is recommended for. The Pile and Humor cure is entirely vegetable in its composition, and can be used with perfect safety in all cases. McKAY'S

CHOICE AND BEAUTIFUL

WALL PAPER.

INCLUDING THOSE DEDICATED BY THE MANUFACTURERS TO

Their Excellencies the Earl and Countess of Dufferin.

These Paperhangings are imported direct from the best Manufacturing Establishments in England, France and United States. Great care has been taken in their selection with regard to colour. The ground tones are soft and pleasing to the eye, especially those toned with silver mica; but above all, they are free from the mineral poisons that many of the tawdry-coloured Paperhangings of the day are surcharged with. The Subscriber's long experience as a colourist, and being thoroughly acquainted with the chemical compound of the pigments used in Painting, enables him to reject, in his selection of Paperhangings, those coloured with poisonous pigments, so deleterious to health. The Public are respectfully invited to examine his STOCK of WALL PAPER before purchasing elsewhere.

As the undersigned is going out of the Room Paper Business as soon as his present Stock is disposed of, the Goods will be Sold at the Lowest Remunerating Prices.
