leave the room. One to tell your wife that you are obliged to go abroad for will now write two letters before you two months, and requesting her to remain where she is until you return ; the other to request me to attend her during her absence at her new residence.

'I shall send the two children to her. At the end of two months, unless the last dose was too strong for her shattered system, she will be quite well, and you may rejoin her. Until that time you had better be—absent.

'One word more. You know that the insurance company, in which you had that policy on your wife's life, has failed. Perhaps you do not know that Mrs. De Grey has succeeded to an annuity of £300 a year from an old friend of her family.

'You stay here for a week, then go quietly to Paris ; but mark, if your wife die in any circumstances of mystery, whether I am alive or dead, retribution will hunt you to the ends of the earth.'

'But Virginie—the nurse ? stammered the self-convicted wretch.

'Virginie knows nothing, excepting that she did what she was told. She has done stranger things than that without ever asking for reasons. She will never open her lips on the subject. You are perfectly secure, for the chemists had no idea on what their experiments were made.'

Next day the Magnificent was in his place in the Pump Room as usual.

Men looked shy at him, and women looked sly, He was as cool and lofty as ever,

He waited until the room was full, and then taking an opportunity when Heathcote and Henshaw were close to him, he called out, "Mr. Henshaw."

Henshaw took no notice. He repeated his call with the same effect. Lenoir took two strides towards him, and lifting him by his shoulders, placed him with his back to the pillar, and then said—

'You presumed yesterday to make remarks disparging to a lady. You will be kind enough now to retract them, or I propose to kick you from one end of this room to the other.'

Pale and affrighted was the little lawyer, but Dr. Heathcote interposed.

'Dr. Lenoir, this must not be : I was the accuser yesterday, and you must first deal with me,'

'True, my dear Heathcote, but I mean to deal with each after their kind. You are a gentleman and a man of honor, and as such I intend to treat you. Read that.

Dr. Heathcote read, to his intense astonishment the following note :

Bath ; August 12, 1798.

My dear Lenoir,—As I am obliged to go to the continent for two months, I hope you will allow me to leave Mrs. De Grey under your charge, should she at her present residence require your advice.

Yours very truly,

F. DE GREY.

'Read it out, doctor,' said Lenoir, and the bewildered man obeyed.

'Now you slanderous little toad, eat up your calumnies on the spot,' said Lenoir to the lawyer.

'I am sure I meant nothing,' said he : I will make yon repent these words.'

'Eat them up, I say, for the last time.' And terribly he looked down on Henshaw.

The latter quailed. 'I admit,' he said, 'they have turned out not to be true.'

'And ought not to have been spoken.'

'And ought not to have been spoken.'

'Go then and be warned.'

'You will hear from me to-morrow, however, for all this.'

'I think not,' said Lenoir, when he had gone ; and he did not, for the purveyor of scandal thought better of it, and transferred his attentions to Scarborough.

'And now, Dr. Heathcote, I presume you retract that epithet which you used yesterday. I admit appearances were against me ; but a true physician distrusts appearances.'

'I forgive the banter, and cheerfully retract the expression ; but after what the Colonel said, hang me, doctor, if I know what to make of it.'

'I never supposed you did,' said Lenoir ; and the Magnificent reigned in Bath for many years afterwards.

The gaps in the story you must fill up as suits you best. Lenoir in his trip to London, had consulted his solicitor, who told the story to my late master. The cautious London lawyer told Lenoir he might be hanged for compounding felony ; and Lenoir told him he might be hanged for his advice. The annuity was, as the solicitor believed provided by Lenoir himself ; and the surmise was, either that he was in love with the lady, or he knew more of her history than he chose to explain : or probably both. The Colonel and Mrs. De Grey never visited Bath again, but the annuity was paid for many years afterwards, the Colonel, probably, being as anxious to keep his wife alive as he had been to destroy her, and she, poor thing, with the constancy and credulity of women, rejoicing in her inmost soul at the increased tenderness of her husband.—Fraser's Magazine.

Underwriters now decline all risks on the steamer City of Boston.

Mr. HULBERT, the contractor of the Quebec and Gesford Railway, and a large shareholder in it, is said to have offered to lease the road for seven years, paying seven per cent, on the capital invested and a cord of wood at cost price for each and every share. The offer is now under consideration.

We have heard of the boast which used to be made by the monarchs of Spain, that the sun never set on their dominions : Queen Victoria has a still higher glory, that there is not one hour of the twenty-four in which the Lord's Prayer is not offered up in the English tongue on some part of the globe.—

IRISH EVICTIONS—A Parliamentary return prepared in the Irish Constabulary Office states that in three years 1867, 1868, 1869, 1,560 families, comprising 7,232 persons, were evicted in Ireland. Deducting re-admissions, the number of actual evictions is reduced to 1,285 families comprising 5,965 persons.

HEADFORD WOOLEN MILLS, 3RD concession of Markham,

JOHN EYER would return thanks to his customers for their liberal support during the Carding Season, and would inform them, and others, in adjoining Townships, that he will be ready to do their Fulling, Coloring, Cloth Dressing, Pressing, &c., as good, cheap, and as quick as any other establishment in the Dominion,

CARDING, SPINNING AND WEAVING.

Having also put in New Machinery, he is prepared to do Spinning and Carding by the pound, if required.

MANUFACTURING.

Will take the wool, as sheared from the sheep, and make it up into Fulleloth of any kind, or pattern, to suit parties, such as Cloths, Tweeds, Cassimeres, Satinetts, Plain or Twill Flannels, Dress Flannels, Blankets (Horse or Bed), White or Colored Stocking Yarn (2 or 3 Ply), &c.

He will have on hand Cotton Warp, of a superior quality, that persons wishing to have their yarn wove, can have it done at a Lower Rate than they possibly can buy bunch cotton.

Having spared neither time nor expense in getting good Machinery and Workmen to fulfill promises, he hopes still to receive a share of public patronage.

Justice unto all, I intend to give ;
My motto shall be—to live and let live.

Gristing will be attended to all times as formerly,
