Findlay Makes An Open Confession

They say that an open confession is good for the soul so I feel like making one. Last Spring I bought rather heavily on Baby Supplies, expecting a Bumper Year along that line, but whether the wet weather had anything to do with it or not, we find ourselves with Fall coming on with too many Baby Carriages to carry over the winter, so we will give you a real bargain if you are in need for one now, or it would pay you to hold one over until next spring if necessary. We say we serve the people. Just call in and let us again demonstrate that you do not have to send away to get bargains in anything in our line for we invite you to compare our goods as to quality and price with other neighboring towns, or outside firms.

A GREAT DOCTOR'S DECLARATION.

Howard A. Kelly, the noted surgeon, for years has been one of the chief medical experts in the Johns Hopkins university at Baltimore, and one is not surprised to learn that great interest has been taken by his fellow practitioners throughout the world as well as by the reading public, in his declaration that there is no known disease of which alcohol is a cure.

This fact, Dr. Kelly points out, is well known to scientists, and is now generally admitted by progressive members of the medical profession. The view is contrary to beliefs which have been held for generations, and are therfore hard to displace. Nevertheless Dr. Kelly affirms that alcohol does not cure, does not stimulate, but on the contrary lessens mental and physical vitality. It creates only an illusion of vigor which does not exist.

Railways will not employ men who are drinkers of intoxicants, and the law provides that drivers of automobiles found under the influence of liquor are to be imprisoned, and such men are now being committed to prison and deprived of their liberty to control an auto. It has been shown that a man who is filled up with liquor loses the ability to form a quick judgment and to supply liquor to an autoist endangers life, and has in numerous instances resulted in homicide.

The medical profession certainly has made great strides since, on the one hand doctors generally prescribed whiskey as a curative agency, while at the same time they freely resorted to bleeding their patients. Now we have the reverse operation; blood transfusion is the practise. In the last century they put whiskey into a patient and took blood out of him. Modern practise has reversed the process. They keep whiskey out of him and put blood in.

Dr. Kelly argues that there is really nothing to be said in favor of the consumption of intoxicants as medicine or as a beverage, and that the injury to the human race through the use of these liquors completely overbalances any little benefit that may be derived by their occasional use as a drug. This expert physician, indeed, ventures the prophesy that in another decade the prescription of alcohol as a medicine will be prohibited.

THE MAKING OF BOOKS

Every now and again, there is a demand for fewer new books and a sighing for the return to the old times when the issue of a new work of fiction was indeed novel. So long, however, as we have a reading public, so long will we have writers and publishers eager to meet the demand, which is stimulated also by the ease with which new books can be published and marketed. When the printed book was in its comparative infancy, however, there was complaint that the age was swamped with much writing .There was that brave epistle which good Thomas Coryat wrote to his readers in 1611:—"Having lately considered in my serious meditations the unmeasurable abundance of books of all Arts sciences and arguments whatsoever, that are printed in this learned age wherein we now breathe, in so much that me thinks we want rather readers for books than books for readers; my thoughts beganne to be much distracted." Having so considered, like a good modern critic he gave the alerned age in which he lives another book!

EDITORIAL NOTES

That a Canadian "who has never used meat, alcohol or tobacco" celebrates his 75th birthday "proves" nothing that but these are not necessities of life; only that they can be dispensed with quite safely.

On the whole, with good crops, pleanty fow ork for all willingly to labor, and a Dominion election some years off, it is difficult to get Canadian people excited about politics this year.

• • •

The Women's Institute have done a public service, for which they deserve the thanks of the community. They have had the fence of the Flesherton Memorial Park painted, and the grass cut away. The Park would be still further improved if the long grass and weeds inside and outside the fence were cut down. We cannot have our surroundings made too beautiful.

A correspondent of the Toronto Mail and Empire rebukes that organ for its inconsistuency in approving of the imprisonment of a man found intoxicated in drving a car, while commending the decision of a magistrate that an autoist is at liberty to carry an open bottle of liquor with him provided it was opened in a "legal place" and taken to another for consumpton. It must not be consumed in transit. This is represented to be the law in Ontario. If it is, it is nigh time there was a change. If a car driver can carry liquor in an open bottle from place to place, what in the world will prevent him from imbibing to his heart's content while en route to the other place, hereby placing himself in jeopardy and inperilling his life and the lives of others. Fearful and wonderful is the law, if its endorses rightly interpet it.

There is still much discussion about immigration into Canada and the best means of having the newcomers made into self supporting settlers. After all, the principal point to be met with is the employment. If we can have the immigrant assisted to settle on the land and enabled to earn an all the year round living for themselves that is the ideal meeting of the problemn. When however, we have a demand for the importation of settlers for employment on farms for a few months only, to be cast adrift on the eve of winter and to crowd towns and cities competing for work in a market already filled by native Canadians, this simply cannot be regarded as fair either to those already here or the new arrivals. We have this problemn illustrated by the harvesting demands of the West. It is well that the inmigration authorities, have, in the circumstances, taken the stand that men who come from Great Britain to aid in these western harvesting operations do so at their own risk of the old world authorities who pay their passage, and that they must return to their homes if they are unable to obtain a home and employment in Canada, and thereby do not become a winter burden to the municipal authorities. We need new population, so long as it can find employment without causing distress to itself or the workers already here.

Addresses by M.P.'s

The meeting in the town hall on Monday evening, in which Miss A. C. Macphail, M.P., and Mr. F. R. Oliver, M.P.P., gave a synopsis of the work of the sessions in the both Houses, during the past six months, was only attended by a small crowd, due to the fact that the day was fine harvesing weather, and the farmers were therefore taking advantage.

Miss Macphail spoke on the legislation brought down in the House of Commons, and also on the bills that were defeated for various causes. She also spoke on the momentous occasion of the signing by the principal nations of the world to outlaw was as a national policy. She stated that she would like to see Canada have an equal status, but was in favor of remaining in the British Commonwealth of Nations, regardless of people trying to say that she stood otherwise.

Mr. Oliver dwelt mainly on the hydro question as it affected the farmer, and he was hoping to soon see farmers able to enjoy hydro on the farm at a price not prohibitive. He also spoke on the liquor control question, mothers and widow's allowance and the old age pension bill, pjroposed to be brought down in the House next session.

A HAPPY FATHER

A big fat gink who seems to be putting on avoirdupois at the expense of his children breezed into town on Friday in a motor and while his youngsters played tunes on the fiddle and went around and gathered up the collection, daddy sat lazily in the car puffing at a cigarette. As an exemplification of the refrain, "Everybody works but Father." he has all the other paternal loafers backed off the map.—Walkerton Herald & Times
