Interpreting the N. P.

Sir Leonard Tilley no doubt thinks that he had something to do with the authorship of the N. P. Public opinion says that if he had anything to do with it, it was very little. Little as it was, it is becoming less under the manipulations of his appraisers, Deputy Ministers, and other tariff tinkers. The coal tax has been abolished, so far as regards one favoured industry and locality. The sugar tariff has been completely changed, to the injury of the consumer and the independent importer and to the further benefit of the refining monopoly. And now we learn that there has been a broadsword combat between the Toronto importers and the Board of Appraisers, represented by the unspeakable Frazer, ending in the issue of another set of regulations totally at variance with the wording of the N. P.

The fabric known as winceys was the subject of battle. The importers claimed that it was a manufacture of cotton not specified in the tariff, and therefore chargeable at 20 per cent. The omniscient Frazer, though, said it was "shirtings," and therefore chargeable at two cents per yard and fifteen per cent. ad valorem. Housewives will smile on learning that it required all the wisdom of the Board of Appraisers to come to a decision on this point, and even then they made a ridiculous and unlawful mess of it. The law of Canada now is, according to their decision, that when wincey is plain, and of less width than twenty-six inches, it is a "manufacture of cotton," and chargeable 20 per cent.; being then a worthy and desirable object, the importation of which a wise and paternal Government should in no way attempt to discourage. But when the wincey is of "fancy" pattern, or greater width than 26 inches, it becomes a dangerous and subversive institution which ought not to be allowed to pollute our glorious soil under two cents a yard and fifteen per cent. of taxation. How past finding out are the ways of tariff-tinkers!

Another wrestle there has been over the classification of Angola shirting. The irrepressible Frazer says there is wool in it. Now, the importation of wool, except in the "raw" state, is a monstrous crime, and it is therefore necessary to levy upon the fabric a tax of 7½ cents per pound and twenty per cent. ad valorem, as upon a "manufacture composed in part of wool." The manufacturers and the importers say that there is no wool in it, and defy the inquisitorial Frazer to prove it. The whole Board of Appraisers have been turning their energies to detecting the wool, but are unable to do it. Yet, because the infallible Frazer himself hath said it, they stick to it, and Angola shirting in the eyes of the law contains wool, whether there be any wool in it or not.

While there is a ridiculous side to these squabbles there is also a serious one. The endless diversities in classification put a tremendous engine of corruption in the hands of the Custom House officials. We hope and trust that Canadian officials will, notwithstanding the temptations put in their way, prove superior to the demoralizing influences which among our neighbours have made the very name of Custom House officer to stink in the nostrils.—Globe.

The Reasoning Powers of Animals Under the Influence of Affection.

No. 4.

The thoughtful, pure and active benevolence of dogs. This may not be a marked attribute of the canine race as a whole; but it stands out with great prominence in not a few of them, of which the subjoined and remarkable instances are worthy of our reflective meditation.

(A.) "On Friday last Edward Cooper, clerk at Evertsen's banking-house, and who lives on Third-street, Bath, gave away a dog which he had in his possession. On Saturday night the dog made its appearance at the door of Mr. Cooper's house, barking and acting in a strange manner. It continued to such a degree that Mr Cooper was compelled to go down to the door. When he opened it the dog would not enter, but seemed inclined to go up the road, barking all the while. Finally Mr. Cooper put on his clothes, and, going out, followed the animal. It proceeded up the road and led Mr. Cooper to a boy named Dedrick, who had fallen from a waggon and fractured his leg. Mr. Cooper procured assistance and caused the boy to be removed to his house, where medical aid was procured and the lad's injuries attended to. The boy had almost perished from cold."

(B.) On Thursday afternoon and Friday morning, says the Cleveland Herald of Monday, we chronicled the fact that a little boy seven years old, who had wandered away from his home on Chatham street, West Side, and became lost, was found by a policeman on Thursday morning, crouched in the corner of a yard at the corner of Bank and Lake streets, asleep and half frozen, for the weather was quite cold. And to this should now be added the fact that the boy, finding himself unable to make his way home, began to cry, and while thus engaged, a large dog, apparently a cross between the hound and shepherd breeds, which the boy had never seen before, came along, and, appreciating the boy's distress, took up a position close to the boy, and remained on guard before him, lending the warmth of his shaggy covering to keep comfortable the feet and limbs of his human ward. He was in downright earnest in his self-imposed guardianship, for when the officer attempted to rouse the little sleeper and take him to the station for better security, the dog manifested a disposition to resist any interference with his charge, and it required considerable coaxing on the part of the patrolman to induce compliance on the part of the canine constable. He finally conceded the point, however, and suffered the little wanderer to be led to the central station, where he was given a chance to get a good nap on a lounge in a warm room. But the dog did not dissert him even here, seeming to think that he might require further attention, and he followed on to the station, stole quietly into the room where he was taken, stretched himself out on the floor beside the couch of his little companion, and when the sergeant went thither at seven o'clock in the morning, to look after the little fellow, the dog manifested no little anger at the intrusion, and stuck to the boy with a fidelity as devoted as it was wonderful. The little fellow was then taken to the West Side station on Detroit street, the dog still attending him, and taking up a position at his feet as soon as they reached there, and viewing all comers with the eye of jealous and determined guardianship. What became of the two after this, beyond the fact that the boy was restored to his home, we know not, but the peculiar and wonderful conduct of the dog certainly deserves the mention and commendation we here make of it.

(c.) On one occasion a shepherd took with him an infant of three years, and after traversing his pastures for some time, attended by his dog, he found himself under the necessity of ascending a summit at some distance to have a more extensive view of his range. As the ascent was too fatiguing for his child, he left him on a small plain at the bottom, with strict injunctions not to stir until his return. Scarcely, however, had he gained the summit when the horizon was suddenly darkened by one of those impenetrable mists which frequently descend so rapidly amidst these mountains, as, in the space of a few minutes, almost to turn day into night. The anxious father instantly hastened back to find his child, but, owing to the unusual darkness, and his own trepidation, he unfortunately missed his way in the descent. After a fruitless search of many hours amongst the dangerous morasses and cataracts, with which the mountains abound, he was at length overtaken by night. Still wandering on without knowing whither, he at length came to the edge of the mist, and by the light of the moon discovered that he had reached the bottom of the valley, and was now within a short distance of his cottage. To renew the search that night was equally fruitless and dangerous. He was therefore obliged to return to his house, having lost both his child and his dog, which had attended him faithfully for years. Next morning by daybreak the shepherd, accompanied by a band of his neighbors, set out again to seek his child; but after a day spent in fruitless fatigue, he was at last compelled by the approach of night to descend from the mountain. On returning to his cottage he found that the dog, which he had lost the day before, had been home, and on receiving a piece of cake had instantly gone off again. For several successive days the shepherd renewed the search for his child, and still on returning in the evening disappointed to his cottage, he found that the dog had been there, and on receiving his usual allowance of cake, had instantly disappeared. Struck with this singular circumstance, he remained at home one day, and when the dog, as usual, departed with his piece of cake, he resolved to follow him, and find out the cause of this strange procedure. The dog led the way to a cataract at some distance from the spot where the shepherd had left his child. The banks of the waterfall almost joined at the top, yet separated by an abyss of immense depth, presented that abrupt appearance which so often appals the traveller amidst the Campian mountains, and indicates that these stupendous chasms were not the silent work of time, but the sudden effect of some violent convulsion of the earth. Down one of these rugged and almost perpendicular descents, the dog began without hesitation to make his way, and at last disappeared in a cave, the mouth of which was almost upon a level with the torrent. The shepherd with difficulty followed; but on entering the cave, what were his emotions when he beheld his infant eating, with much satisfaction, the cake which the dog had just brought him, while the faithful animal stood by, eyeing his young charge with the utmost complacency!

A small bomb was exploded on Thursday in the Church of St. Louis, Madrid. No one was injured.

Our Inner Life.

Each has a secret self, an inner life
Of hopes and fears,
High aspirations, doubtings, calm and strife
And joy and tears.

No eye but God's within the veil can look:
Unto the world
The human heart is an unopened book—
A banner furled.

A mighty ocean to whose lowest deeps
We cannot see—
A secret treasury, of which Heaven keeps
The master-key.

An unsolved, awful mystery sublime
We're understood—
A battle-field, where virtue strives with crime
Evil with good.

The angels of our kind and adverse fate
Are marshalled there:
Light grappling with grim darkness love with hate
Hope with despair.

None e'er can pass the secret inner door
That guards the heart:
It is a crypt oneself cannot explore
In every part.

We are not as we seem—for oft the eye
Belies the breast:
The lips cry "peace" when haggard care is nigh,
And wild unrest.

Measure the sunbeams—compass sea and land—
Creation's plan
Find out!—'Twere easier than to understand
The heart of man.

Durham, 1879 F. W. PORTER.

Only lately Clarke township paid smartly for damage done by a hole in a public road A repetition of the lesson is about to follow. The Bowmanville Statesmen says:—On Monday night last or early on Tuesday morning Mr. James Stephens and Mr. W. Knight were passing along theroad between the 6th and 7th concessions of Clarke, due south of Kendall, the horse and waggon fell into a gravel-pit in the roadway which was unprotected on the south and East sides. The waggon first tipped into the pit and the horse followed, falling on the waggon between the wheels, with Mr. Knight under the waggon. Mr. Stephens, finding the waggon going over, made a spring and found himself lying between the waggon and the side of the pit. His left knee had come in contact with the waggon in some way, and on examination a cut was found in the side and the joint of the knee is supposed to be considerably injured. Mr. Stephens is laid up and under the doctor's care. Action will be taken at once to recover damages from the township Council. The amount of damages can scarcely be estimated until it is known whether or not the knee is permanently injured.
