AN UNSURPASSED MEDIUM

As an advertsing medium, there has been nothing yet invented to surpass the newspaper, where the people of all classes are to be reached, and all business interests desirous of attaining their greatest objectives instinctively seek to avail themselves of such newspaper space at every opportunity. It reaches the greatest number of people keeping the message of merchants, manufacturers, producers and others continually before them, at the time when they are best disposed to read the news of the day, of which news the advertising columns, contain quite as interesting material as may be found in any other departments of the paper, and which is as eagerly read in this age of keen competition for business.—Guelph Mercury.

Back of the first prize canned peaches at the Meaford Fair there is a story. The peaches were exhibited by Mrs. Howard Carnahan. They are the product of a tree that like Topsy "just growed." The tree from which they were taken grew from a peach stone thrown out of the window. It was from a choice peach and has reproduced its kind. The stone did not fall among tares but into choice ground in an ideal location for peaches in this northern section. It fell into ground protected on the north and west and the little producing peaches which plus the first prize at the show.—Mirror.
