Toronto Star Building Is A Work of Art

The junior editor of The Advance was among a large number of newspaper men of Ontario and Quebec who attended a luncheon in Toronto at the official opening of the new Toronto Star, 23-storey building. The editors were received in the private office of Mr. J. E. Atkinson, President of the Star, assisted by Mrs. Atkinson. A buffet luncheon was served in the spacious library where the brethern of the press enjoyed an hour of social fellowship.

Groups of 20 were taken through the huge building by competent guides to view the wonders of the most modern newspaper building, an unquestionable contribution to architecture.

Six storeys of the new building contain the editorial and mechanical plant of the Star. Two huge presses print 180,000 Stars each hour it operates at full speed and they are of the latest type of construction obtainable. It is a wonderful experience to see these presses print an edition of the Star. Paper is stored on the third floor of the building and 6,000 rolls are instantly available—a two months' supply. In one average week recently 736 full sized rolls, each roll six feet wide and four miles long,—3000 miles of paper and each roll weighs three-quarters of a ton. Another idea of the speed which the presses travel is the fact that they are capable of eating up paper at the rate of seven miles per minute, over 420 miles of paper an hour.

The news is received from outside mainly by telegraph machines, a combination typewriter and telegraph instruments, which actually typewrite without an intervention of a receiving operator, simultaneously in many newspaper offices throughout the continent. Afterwards the news coming in this way is edited and headings put on and sent by automatic tubes to the composing room, where it is set on linotye machines and finally finds its way to the presses to be printed as the regular daily edition.

It is indeed an education to view a modern newspaper plant in full working order. Everything apparently goes along smoothely, like well oiled machinery; but no doubt the troubles of a country weekly are infinisesimal compared to a large city daily.

LAST WEEK'S SENSATION

The only real sensation we noticed in town last week was the day Mark Wilson's butcher horse ran away and came tearing up the street at full speed. But the pony taking pity on us, and, realizing that too much excitement is not a good thing, did no damage. The animal knew where it was going, and stopped momentarily in front of the shop, but finally decided to go on to the stable where it was easily captured and returned to work.—Durham Chronicle.
