SET 105 FIRES.

Self-confessed Incendiary Gets Long Prison Sentence.

New York, March 4.—Israel Kessler, declared to be a member of an "arson ring" operating in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston and other cities, was sentenced in the Brooklyn county court to serve from six years to thirteen years six months at hard labor, in Sing Sing.

Kessler was convicted of arson after an alleged confession that he set 105 fires during the past few years.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO.

What Happened in Kingston and Elsewhere in 1888.

Six failures have been reported in the city since Jan. 1st.

Several people have been fined for offences against the Scott act.

Sydenham street church accepted plans presented by Architect Powers, for improvements.

Given "Cat-o'-Nine-Tails."

A boy between fifteen and sixteen years of age came before Magistrate Farrell, in the juvenile court, on Tuesday morning. The youth, it appears, wanted to "run his own show," and would have no one dictate to him what he should or should not do. He was over the age for compulsory school attendance, and what was worse, he would not work.

Rev. A. E. Smart, Children's Aid Agent, appeared on his behalf, and his mother was also present. The magistrate, after weighing the case, advised the "cat-o'-nine-tails," which was accordingly administered.

Deaths of Infants.

An infant one and a half days old died on Monday afternoon. William Lewis Goodman was the child's name and after birth at its home on William street, it lived only thirty-six hours.

Another child's death occurred at the Iroquois hotel on Tuesday morning at nine o'clock, when Vivienne Marie, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Theriault died. The baby was two months old.

To Have a Time.

The children are going to have the time of their lives at the Covered rink on Saturday morning. For the first time the children will have the opportunity of skating with the band. "Mike" Flanigan is thinking seriously of allowing the children to take part in the grand march. On Monday evening the grand march was given and it certainly proved a great attraction.

Joseph Ettor, a leader of the strike of members of the Industrial Workers of the World, at Lawrence, Mass., returned to the United States on Monday, having been taken from a train at White Rock, B.C., last Friday and deported on an order from Ottawa.

One man was killed when customs officers opened fire on Allan Line sailors caught smuggling contraband goods ashore at Philadelphia.

"Violet soap," 25c. box. Gibson's.

WINTER ON THE NILE.

Life on Steamer That Passes Flowery Fields.

Without doubt the pleasantest place in which to spend a non-wintry winter is Egypt—the banks of the Nile. In Cairo, perhaps, it is not quite correct to describe the winter as non-wintry, for the early morning and evening cold is sufficient to make itself very sensibly felt; but in Assuan and Luxor the winter is no winter in the European sense of the word.

By Christmas the narcissus and the violets, immense beds of which grow in the gardens, are already in bloom; while by March, our early spring, the orange-blossom and the scarlet hibiscus are fully out, the pink and white oleanders and petunias are flowering with a profusion utterly unknown in European gardens, and the long, lofty wall of the winter palace gardens in Luxor is hung with, as it were, a tapestry of deep yellow Marechal Niel roses and deep purple bougainvillea—wonderful color-study of tints, both rich and rare. Winter on the Nile, indeed, is more like an ideal summer, with warm days, which are yet not exhausting, and with cool evenings and early mornings, which possess some marvelous quality of freshness and invigorating power of which evenings and early mornings elsewhere seem bereft.

For complete rest and refreshment of mind and body, I think, after considerable experience of travel, that I should send any one to Egypt in preference to any other part of the world. I should not recommend much time being spent in Cairo, as, interesting city though it is in the older and native parts, it is not characteristically Egyptian, and does not, unless, perchance for the incorrigible townlover, possess anything approaching to the nameless charm of the Nile and upper Egypt.

Throughout the entire journey, lasting about a fortnight, from Cairo to Assuan, this abundant life of the Nile is ceaselessly in evidence. In summer, the dead season, it might be less apparent, but in winter or spring the signs of people, habitations, domestic animals, cultivation, wherever the eye rests, are striking beyond all else in the Egyptian landscape. In the winter there are crops to be sown, watered and tended, and by early spring the first of these crops are ready for harvest.

Great golden masses of corn are already to be seen near Luxer, and barley already bearded even near Cairo; tomatoes are fit for gathering, great purple-black aubergines ripe for plucking, opium poppies in flower, field after field of them of all colors; and, above all, there are onions everywhere, acres of onions, lucerne and grain.

The winter is not past, indeed, before the fellah is planting in the uncovered stretches of rick black Nile mud and in sandy spits where the larger wild birds congregate the seeds of the watermelons, which in summer are almost the staff of his life. To see those watermelon plants from day to day used to remind me of an old nursery rhyme, three lines of which ran thus:

And the gardener-man,
With the watering-can,
Says "Gracious! how fast he grows!"

For they grow almost visibly, fostered by the hot sunshine and nourished by the fat Nile mud.

It is doubtless this ceaseless life and activity of the Nile and not merely the sense of vast limitless space, the boundless horizon, nor the atmospheric effects changing with the time of day, which prevent the Egyptian scene from ever wearying or becoming monotonous. I do not think I speak for myself alone when I say that I have spent day after day in the bows of a Nile steamer doing nothing whatever but watching the scenes passed through, without for a moment finding the days too long.

Apart from the life actually on the river, with the passage of boats, bearing the peculiar long Nile sails, manned by bawling Arabs and laden with strange cargoes of water jugs, sugar cane, and maize, there is the life on the shore itself—the life of a people unfamiliar and yet familiar, because they seem to have come out of the pages of the family Bible at whose illustrations we used to look in our childhood, a people doing things as they did them thousands of years ago, living a life which we see to be real because it goes on before our eyes, and which yet seems a life of long ago.—London Morning Post.
