CLIFTON'S HOTEL,
(LATE RASCO'S,)
ST. PAUL STREET, MONTREAL.
THE undersigned respectfully returns thanks for the liberal patronage received by him since he has OPENED that MAGNIFICENT MANSION,
Formerly known as RASCO'S HOTEL, and begs to inform the public that he has Renovated the whole Establishment, and can safely assure Visitors who honor him with their patronage that nothing shall be wanted on his part to contribute to their convenience and comfort.
The BILLS OF FARE, the WINES, the BATHS, the CARRIAGES and the Internal Decorations of this splendid establishment cannot be surpassed by any on the Continent.
The Situation is delightful; That part of St. Paul Street on which the house stands being eighty feet wide. A new Street, fifty feet wide, leads immediately from the very front of the Hotel to the River, and a complete and extended view of the Navigation of the St. Lawrence is distinctly seen from almost every window.

Extracts from late English Papers.

FOREIGN THEATRES IN LONDON.

From the Observer.

The present deserted state of the English stage has at length awakened the attention of actors and managers to the necessity of taking some steps towards calling public attention and sympathy to the situation of the professors of the dramatic art. This movement has been accelerated by the announcement of the company attached to the Theatre Historique, Paris, who have made public their intended appearance at the Theatre Royal Drury-lane in a few days. They propose giving 25 representations, at the rate of three nights per week, and the celebrated novelist, Alexandre Dumas, is engaged to superintend the production of his own romance "Monte Cristo." For many days the walls of the metropolis have been plaearded with handbills inviting the co-operation of the public and profession to the neglected state of our national drama, and the alarming increase of foreign actors in the various London theatres. At present we have the two Italian Operas (Haymarket and Covent-garden,) St. James Theatre, Drury-lane (announced to open for French dramas,) and a negotiation has been on foot at the Olympic Theatre for the appearance of the Opera Comique company from Paris. It will be seen from this that it is probable five of our first-class theatres may be occupied in a few days by continental artistes.—This threatened occupation of the London houses by foreigners has called forth the subjoined petition, intended to be presented to the Legislature by the management and members of the Lyceum Theatre, as dancers, musicians, machinists, &c., employed. The following is the petition:—

To the Hon. the House of Commons in Parliament Assembled.

"We, the undersigned, your petitioners, viewing with great alarm the announcement of a company of foreign artists at the Theatre Royal, Drury lane, most humbly venture to call the attention of your hon. House to the fact, that there being already several theatres open in London for foreign performances, to the great injury of English theatres in the metropolis already established, and struggling to maintain their position, it must be evident that any increase of such performances must cause the immediate closing of the doors against native talent, and the numerous performers now engaged at the various theatres in the metropolis must be deprived of their subsistence; and not only are they personally sufferers, but the numerous artisans and their families, amounting to many thousands (taking the numbers in the aggregate of theatres in the metropolis,) be wholly deprived of the means of support.

"Your petitioners, therefore, humbly pray your hon. House, by some enactment to restrict the number of foreign theatres in the metropolis to those already established in the country, and to afford your petitioners such further and other relief as your hon. House shall deem meet, and

"Your petitioners, as in duty bound, will "ever pray," &c.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

From the London Times.

It has generally been the pride of Englishmen that they are free from those illiberal national prejudices by which most other countries are distinguished. It has been their boast, and although English artists have been maltreated by foreigners the English public have made no reprisals. If the Parisians or the Belgians have misconducted themselves, it has not been considered a sufficient reason for Englishmen to misconduct themselves likewise. The doctrine is simple. If the foreign artist succeeds in pleasing enough people to enable him to pursue his profession in this metropolis, it is our custom to allow him to work on; if he fails we allow him to tumble into oblivion with equal nonchalance.

Such, we thought, was English doctrine; but some score of people, it seems, think otherwise. According to the apparent creed of these individuals, it is a meritorious deed to hiss French actors simply because they act in French, and to "pre damn" a French play before the rising of the curtain, on purpose to show that it is neither the dolness nor the immorality of the production that offends them. This new school of "protectionists" assembled last night within the walls of Drury-lane Theatre, which was opened for the performance of the play of Monte Christo, with the company from the "Theatre Historique" of Paris, and got up the most disgraceful exhibition of illiberality that can be conceived. Were we not convinced that the conduct of these persons was regarded with disgust by the better portion of the audience, we should feel ashamed at the prospect of the Drury-lane disturbance being known to the residents of Paris.

The "row" we have to record is a stupid "row," not only showing the illiberality of the rioters, but their paucity of invention. In the old "O. P." affair there was some humour. A good joke now and then found its way into the uproar: but here was a long, dull, dismal, dreary display of malignity, which was effective from the mere fact that it was wearisome. The "row" was a "slow," tiresome "row." One could not have conceived so much noise mixed up with a display of soporific character. Fussell would have despised such heavy topaqueurs. The poor Frenchmen did all they could to conciliate this amiable specimen of the British public. They opened by playing "God save the Queen;" and when, two or three times afterwards, the rioters, who were loyal to a fault, on this occasion demanded a repetition of the anthem, they politely complied with the request. The plan of singing "God save the Queen" as a signal for uproar is borrowed from the old "O. P." days, and is another mark of the want of originality which signalized the proceedings of last night. The rioters went on hallooing, hooting, whistling through their whistles, and uttering dull exclamations for upwards of three hours, without any reason, and we wonder in what condition their lungs must be at the present moment. M. Jullien, as lessee of the house, attempted to restore order, but not a word of his speech was heard, and the noise pursued its dreary course to the termination of the piece. Some of the "demonstrators" wore little placards, which disfigured their hats, and which recorded something about the want of encouragement to the English drama in Paris. Two or three individuals in the pit thought it the height of humour to put up their umbrellas, but the police deemed it a still better joke to conduct these persons out of the house, which proceeding prevented a repetition of the pleasantry. A person in the boxes was going to take off his coat and fight somebody, and thus, probably for the first time in his life, obtained applause. Never did we see a number of persons so busy in attempting to degrade themselves in the eyes of all rational beings. We have reason to think that some of these zealots, none worthy of better exploits than those of last night, were really persons of standing and respectability in the histrionic profession, and these, we are sure, when they rise this morning, will look with regret on the stupid scene of yesterday, and take especial care not to let their friends know they were concerned in such an exhibition. At the conclusion of the tedious "riot," the mob repeated their chant of "God save the Queen," promised to repeat the "row" on Wednesday (to-morrow) night, and gave three groans for "Albert Smith." What this gentleman had to do with the affair, or why he incurred this heavy penalty, we do not know, but we should certainly say that, under the circumstances, three groans were more flattering than three cheers would have been.

To speak of the drama, which comprised the first entree of Monte Christo, or of the merits of the actors would be absurd on such an occasion. We would simply observe, that as far as the treasury is concerned, last night's performance seems to have been highly successful. The short-sighted rioters paid their money, at any rate, and supported the establishment they intended to crush. Let us hope, in conclusion, that the French gentlemen who were present at the scene of last night did not take the hootings of a few interested persons for the expression of the English people.

THE LONDON CHARTISTS.

From the Times of June 12.

The "peaceful demonstration," unavoidably postponed from April 10 to June 12, stands adjourned sine die. It ended yesterday, not in smoke, but in rain. There is absolutely nothing to record—nothing except the blankest expectation, the most miserable gaping, gamping, and grumbling of disappointed loiterers; the standing about, the roaming to and fro, the dispersing, and the sneaking home of poor simplicons who had wandered forth in the hope of some miraculous crisis in their affairs. The monster meeting in Bishop Bonner's fields simply was not; the focus of rebellion on Clerkenwell Green was never for a moment ignited; Bermondsey did not contribute its battalions, nor did masses appear in Blackfriars Road; Croydon did not proclaim a republic, the New Cut was not insurgent, nor the Marsh up in arms; in Dean Street there was no insurrection, in Lambeth no revolt; there were no myriads rushing down from Hampstead and Blackheath, or advancing from the Vale of St. Pancras or Battersea Fields. In Cumberland market there was no disaffection. There was nothing, absolutely nothing anywhere, that could be called an assemblage, except by mere courtesy. There were never more men in any one vicinity than may be seen any hour of the day at one glance from the portico of the National Gallery. Thus ended the 12th of June.

But there was a collision. The day rose to a climax. It had its flow and its ebb. The morning, though not at all promising, was enough so, even so late as eight o'clock, to fill the metropolis with poor holyday folk, issuing forth by families to catch a little fresh air. Never were the thoroughfares fuller of smart bonnets and dresses, of schoolboys, of shopmen and clerks, released a few hours before their time. All the German waggons were engaged, with gigs and phaetons of all sorts and sizes. But the grim genius of Chartism had little to do with frivolous recreation. So let us turn to Bethnal Green. From an earlier hour some rather weak and sluggish currents of population had timidly set in towards the British Champ de Mars. Scattered over a space capacious enough to contain a very large crowd were the materials of a very little one. The appointed hour, big with the fate of this country, was at hand. So far the heavens were propitious. Why was the "peaceful demonstration" not held? where were the pikes at 2s 6d, the muskets at 12s.? What had befallen the Emmett and the Fitzgerald Brigades, the crimson cap of liberty, the republican fasces, and all the cheap furniture of sedition?

That is soon told. The Chartist Executive, such of them, at least, as, not being at the time within the four walls of Newgate, enjoyed unrestricted exercise of locomotion and conference, wisely employed the Sunday and the following morning in a sober comparison of their strength, with that of the opposing power. They apprehended with tolerable certainty that Her Majesty's Government did not intend to allow the "peaceful demonstration," as it had been fanatically styled. They were credibly informed, through the press, of an overwhelming force in the shape of Horse Guards, Infantry, Chelsea Pensioners, and police. Of the latter they saw in Bishop Bonner's field a formidable number, some mounted, some on foot; some armed with pistols and cutlasses, and others in more customary guise. They became mysteriously conscious of a thorough determination on the part of all the constituted authorities to allow no nuisance of any kind. These appearances, those growing sensations of danger, and considerations of prudence, somewhat hastened the result. About noon Dr. M'Donall, as "Executive" at large, drew near to one of the magistrates on the ground, and put to him an interrogation of momentous significance. He asked, whether it was certainly the intention of the authorities not to allow the meeting. The answer was not less significant—"Yes, Sir." That was the collision. That moment was the peaceful demonstration of the 12th of June. Dr. M'Donall marked, learned, and digested those words. He realized their import, and proceeded with all diligence to diffuse the interesting and valuable information he had just received. Walking hastily along the ground, he communicated first to one group and then to another that there would be no meeting, because Government would not allow it; and that they had better go home and consider what was next to be done. There was no alternative but to take this advice. When the leader refuses to lead, and the counsellor declines to advise, the client must betake himself to his own private resources. So what there was of a crowd, or likely to be a crowd, separated forthwith. The crisis was passed. The peaceful demonstration was over. A magistrate's "Yes, Sir," dismissed the masses to their homes.

Besides collision and a defeat, there was also a rout. The fields named after the bishop of stake and fagot celebrity are an open space on the banks of the Regent's Canal, encircled by various objects of interest, viz., a gay Elizabethan entrance to Victoria park, an enormous union work house, divers large chimnies in the distance, some new churches in various styles, and some unfinished rows of fifth-rate houses. In this space there
