SHOCKING MURDER OF TWO CHILDREN AND ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

A man named Israel Whiteoak, residing with his wife and two children upon the Calf Hole Farm, Burnedge, near Rochelle (England), on Tuesday, in what is supposed to be a fit of insanity, cut the throat of the two children, a boy aged eight years and a girl aged three, and then attempted suicide by cutting his own throat. The wife of the unhappy man gives the following account of the occurrence:—"Twelve months ago my husband suffered very much from rheumatism, and I remembered that he told me that he had a good mind to commit suicide, but he did not know how I could get on with the children. I did not pay much attention to the remark then, because I knew that he was suffering from great pain. He had not been troubled since with rheumatism. On Monday morning I was ill and vomited blood, which seemed to make him very uneasy, and he offered to stop at home from his work but I would not let him. He told me that I must go and see a doctor on Tuesday. At night he retired from his work, and seemed very well, and there was nothing strange in his conduct. He eat a very good supper, and we returned to rest about 11 o'clock. About 4 o'clock in the morning I was awoke by hearing my youngest child cry, and I saw my husband kneeling on the children's bed, looking wild, and the youngest child, as it appeared to me, bleeding from the mouth. I then got up, took the child, and saw that it and its brother's throats were cut. I said to him, 'What have you done?' He made no reply. I ran down stairs with my youngest child, which was not quite dead, and my boy followed after me; but I saw his father seize him at the top of the stairs, and again cut his throat with a razor. I put the child on the couch, and as I was unlocking the door my husband was coming down the stairs. I rushed out and gave alarm to the neighbours." Both the children are dead.

A gentleman having realized a large fortune in the United States, returned to his friends in Zurich, Switzerland, having converted all his property into government bonds, which having examined he left lying on the table. A beautiful little girl who was in the room found some matches and unfortunately set fire to the pile of papers, which were totally consumed. This so exasperated the man that he killed the child with a blow of his fist.

In a German work called "the History of the Rose," the writer mentions that the largest Rose-tree known to exist is in the Marine Garden at Toulon, France. It is of the species known as the Banks rose, bearing white flowers. The branches stretch over a length of seventy-five feet by eighteen feet high. The stem near to the root measures two feet eight inches in circumference, and the plant yields fifty thousand roses during the months of April and May.

It is pointed out in a Paris letter that the much talked-of conversation of the Emperor Napoleon on political assassination, reported by the Nord, is, in fact, a reproduction of a paragraph from a speech from the throne in 1856, in which the Emperor thus expressed himself: "If I live, the empire lives with me; and if I were killed, the empire would be still secured by my death, because the indignation of the army and the people would prove a fresh support for the throne of my son."

The officers of the Italian Navy at Venice have given a splendid dinner at Danieli's Hotel to Lord Clarence Paget and the officers of the English fleet. Adjutant-General Clavisana proposed "The health of the Queen, People, and Navy of England," to which Lord Clarence Paget replied in the following terms:—"Our arrival in these waters has been for me one of the happiest events, in consequence of the truly princely way in which we have been received by our hosts. Our Government is sending us out for our cruise said, 'In Italy go wherever you like, because Italy is our friend;' and we have received the confirmation of this truth, because everywhere we have met with a truly brotherly reception." After dinner all the English officers were conducted in gondolas, expressly decked out and illuminated, along the Grand Canal, bands of music playing serenades in their honour. This festive serenade was prolonged until after midnight.
