EXCITEMENT RAN HIGH

Great excitement was caused in town on Monday morning that in a few moments resembled the preparations for a war. Word had been reecived of the attempt that would likely be made to rob a bank in Dundalk, and no chances were being taken at the local bank if the robbers were to change their mind and come to Flesherton. However, the thugs no doubt learned of the armed conditions of this camp and decided that they would keep their hair on for a short time longer and feared that things were too hot here for their own comfort. In Dundalk every stranger that came into the town was shadowed to make sure that he was going about on legitimate business, and the scare passed off. This district has been wonderfully free from holdups, but it is not known at what time they might come. They come fast and go in the same way, many times those knowing of the raids being those interested parties in the banks who are forced to stand with their hands towards the heavens while the money is scooped into bags. We hope that it will be many moons before we are favored (?) with a visit from these prowlers.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Two hundred candidates are going before the people for election. There will be one hundred and twenty-nine left at home to think of the idiocyncrasies of voters.

Rumors are going the rounds that a deficiency in the funds of the agricultural society would be made up from the surplus of the Old Home Week Committee. It is to be hoped that such will not be the case as we understood that these funds would be used for some local improvement to be decided upon. The exact balance has not been announced as yet, but it is expectd that it will be around one thousand dollars.

A LITTLE DOG

by L. M. Lindler

Did you ever have a little dog to help you with your play? To romp with you, and walk with you through a sunny summer day?

If you haven't—Well, I'll tell you—you've missed a lot of joy. I wouldn't trade my little dog for any girl or boy.

We've never had a quarrel—not the leastest tiny one, but always been the best of friends from dawn 'till set of sun, and after I'm in bed at night he comes in to say "Good night" and he'll be ready for another long bright day.

Sometimes when I don't feel just right and do not care to play, he just sits down beside me, and not a word to say; but we understand each other better than most grown folks do — and his brown eyes say he's sorry, and he knows I'm feeling blue.

I think God loves us children so very much He knew that we'd need, beside our parents, a little dog — don't you.

DO NOT WHIP THE TIRED HORSE

It is natural for us to become tired as the result of our day's work. After a rest we feel refreshed and ready to strat again. Activity and rest are the normal rhythm of life. If, however tiredness or fatigue is increaser by more activity, we reach a stage of exhaustion which is not normal, but harmful, and which may have very serious results.

Over fatigue is not usually caused by over- work. It is usually due to work which is not suitable for the worer, by bad working conditions, by monotony of the employment, or because the individual concerned is not taking care of himself during the hours he spends away from work.

It is necessary that rest, whether it be taken sleeping, or lying down or relaxing, or simply ina change of work or of play, be used to prevent over-fatigue. To some people it seems to be a matter of pride and the drive themselves on to more activity when their bodies are tired and calling out for rst. Exercise or play is certainly fine and most desirable, but it must be indulged in regularly if it is to do good. The man who attempts to crowd a week's play into one day generally exhausts himself, and harm results. He should stop when he is tired.

Tea and coffee, used in moderation, are apparently not harmful for many adults. When they are ussed as a stimulant, to whip up a tired mind and body to more activity—either work or pay—when what is needed is rest, they are being misused. Such stimulants do not relieve fatigue; it may seem to the user as if they do so, but the sensation is false and misleading.

Many may feel that because they cannot change their work or their working conditions, information such as that given above is of no value to them. The truth is that we can all do a great deal to prevent overfatigue by being sensible about how to use our time outside of work hours. Remember that a tired horse should never be whipped.
