London, Sept. 15, eve.—The Pall Mall Gazette, this afternoon, has a leading article on the prospects of peace or war. A Montana gallows is three rails, set up like a tripod, with a man hanging between like a pot.

The Helena (Montana) Gazette says: "An old California trapper and hunter, now operating on the Missouri in the vicinity of Sun river, has succeeded in caging a grisly of enormous size. The monster devours elk and antelope most voraciously, and accepts the situation as coolly as could be expected. A citizen, well known to pugilistic fame, has made arrangements to have him brought to Helena for an encounter with a wild bull. Heavy timbers are now being procured for the construction of a strong twenty-foot square pen, and seats will be provided for the accommodation of an audience of 1500. This promises to be the most exciting affair of the kind that ever took place in Montana."

Parisian rats—how often do tourists stand aghast at finding the centre of civilization infested by them. True it is, that certain quarters of Paris, and more especially the cellars of Halles Centrales, swarm with enormous sized rats. However, they have now found a formidable enemy in M. Noel, to whom the business of extermination has been entrusted, and which is effectually accomplished by terrier dogs. Two nights a week these nocturnal hunts take place, which last for two or three hours, in these vast subterranean arcades; the scene is curious as well as exciting. On all sides these monstrous rats flee from their natural enemies, the terriers, who pursue them with relentless vigour, whose barking adds to their dismay. These hunts are often attended with much danger, as the rats, driven to bay, spring upon the mass, who are, in many instances, badly bitten. The bodies of the largest of these animals are sold for their skins, which, it is generally believed, are made into gloves, but which the manufacturers deny. M. Noel receives a salary of 1,800 francs a year.

Henry Carey, the author of the national anthem, "God save the King," was also author of that well known ballad, "Sally in our Alley;" and of the former he was the author both of the words and music. His history deserves to be known. Disraeli relates it thus:—"At the time the poet could neither walk the street, nor be seated at the convivial board, without listening to his own songs and his own music—for, in truth, the whole nation was echoing his verse, and crowded theatres were clapping his wit and humour—while this very man himself, urged by his strong humanity, had founded a fund for decayed musicians. At this moment was poor Carey himself broken-hearted, and his common comforts so utterly neglected, that in despair, not waiting for nature to relieve him from the burthen of existence, he laid violent hands on himself; and when found dead had only a halfpenny in his pocket. Such was the fate of the author of some of the most popular pieces in our language."

A vessel recently arrived at Boston from an African voyage, which has proved rather unprofitable to the owners, from the fact that a large part of the cargo, supposed to be gold dust, received on the coast, has proved to be nothing more than dross.

Greeley, in his "Recollections," says of his "American Conflict:" "The sale of my history was very large and steady down to the date of the clamour raised touching the bailing of Jeff. Davis, when it almost ceased for a season; thousands who had subscribed for it refusing to take their copies, to the sore disapointment and loss of the agents."

The remains of a chamois hunter, who lost his life in the crevice of a glacier in the Aragnouet Mountains, in the Pyrenees, twenty-seven years ago, have been lately recovered by the splitting of the ice, and buried by his former companions.

Count von Schack, a Prussian artillery lieutenant, and considered the best swimmer in the North-German army, made a bet the other day that he would swim across the Spree, lying on his back, and bearing on his breast a board, with two full bottles of wine, six eggs in a dish, and four tumblers. If one of these articles should fall from the board, he would lose the bet. He won it.

A recent number of M. de Girardin's journal—the Liberte of Paris—contains a large strategical map of the country between Paris and the Rhine. The accompanying text endeavours to prove the right of France to the Rhenish frontier, and argues that she should go to war in order to obtain it.

The question is being discussed whether the Church of of Scotland is not, like that of England, now the representative of a minority of the people. A writer goes over all the available statistics—prison, marriage education, and worship—and concludes that the worshippers outside of the establishment are double those within it.

The Paris Figaro, of August 28, was seized. It publishes a long letter from Mazzini to Garibaldi, in which the old Italian republican expresses his conviction that Napoleon III. is determined to add the Rhenish provinces to his crown, and that he considers a general conflagration can only lead to events which will be advantageous to democracy. He bids Garibaldi remember that his mission is to protect the peoples against kings in like manner as engineers, who, by their works of improvement, guard humanity against pestilence. It would be impossible, it is said, to exaggerate the revolutionary character of the letter.

In a small town in New York, where the population is mostly of German origin, the inhabitants had just built a meeting house. It had a tall spire, but no conductor for the lightning. Being reminded of the deficiency and the danger, the building committee undertook to raise the money needed for a rod, and made their first application to a wealthy Dutch farmer, who had already given largely. "No," said he indignantly, "I have helped build the shursh, and now if the Lord has a mind to dunder down his own house, he may do it, for all me."

A jovial artist was painting some divine, who felt it incumbent upon him to give the painter a moral lecture during one of his sittings. Somewhat in awe of the artist, he began rather nervously; but as the knight of the brush painted away without any sign of annoyance, he gathered courage as he proceeded, and finally administered a pretty good sermon. He paused for a reply, and confessed afterwards that he never felt so insignificant in his life as when the artist, with the urbane but positive authority of his profession, merely said "Turn your head a little to the right, and shut your mouth."

The Kansas Tribune tells the following story of a happy accident: "Two small gamins, who, we suppose, had been sent by their parents to purchase a melon, bought a fine one at a grocery, last evening, and started for home with it. As we passed them one said to the other, 'Don't let it foll, Billy, 'cos if it breaks we'll have to eat it right here, and can't take any home.' Billy guessed it wouldn't fall; but it seems he guessed wrongly, for it wasn't a minute till down it went and split in two. As we passed on there were twe as happy juveniles as could be found, busily engaged in saving the pieces, and it rather struck us there was more meant by the warning than the words conveyed."

I HEREBY certify that I have this day received from Geo. B. Holland, Esq., Supt. of Agencies of the Phœnix Life Assurance Company of Hartford, Conn., Canada Branch, on behalf of the Widow of the late Silas Allen, of this city, the sum of Four Thousand Dollars in Gold, in payment of a policy taken out by the late Mr Allen in the "Phœnix" for Four Thousand Dollars, on the 14th of March, 1868, together with the premium note of Forty-Seven Dollars, which note has been cancelled by the dividend of fifty per cent.

I must also acknowledge, on behalf of Mr Allen, the very prompt manner in which the Company has paid this claim, carrying out in every particular, through Mr Holland, all agreements under the policy, showing that the yearly dividends of fifty per cent cancel the notes given for half the premiums.
