HUNGARIAN GIPSIES IN ENGLAND.—Several disturbances have of late occurred in Woolwich, in consequence of the appearance in the streets of some singular-looking foreigners with a profusion of long curling hair, and were said by the populace to be some of King Theodore's soldiers, who had returned with the Abyssinian army. Being regarded in a hostile attitude, and receiving continual ill-usage, they at length took refuge in the Royal Arsenal, where they received the protection of the police till something could be ascertained about them. On the Arsenal interpreters being sent for it transpired they were well-to-do Hungarian gipsies, who had come over to England partly to ply their calling as coppersmiths. They have been wandering about the outskirts of London for some weeks past, and have pitched their tents alternately at Whip's-cross, Wanstead, Forest-gate, and various other commons and open spaces. A number of them settled down in a gipsy encampment at North Woolwich till dislodged by mosquitoes, and then went over to South Woolwich; but, owing to the rough reception accorded them, under the misapprehension of their being Theodore's followers, they have left for Epping Forest. The English gipsies encamped at Wanstead Flats declined to have any intercourse with the foreigners, although, it is said, the Romany is spoken by some of them, the dirty condition and filthy habits of the latter disgusting even the usually not-over-nice dwellers in tents of our commons. Certainly, their apearance is most uninviting, and the men, when under the influence of our "bitter," which they have learned to imbibe pretty freely, are, to say the least, formidable. Altogether they are a most undesirable addition to our vagrant population.—English Paper.
