THE PHOTOGRAPHER'S STORY.

(Conclusion.)

At the hotel where he had taken up his quarters, there was staying an American family—a Mr and Mrs Marshall, with their eldest daughter, Grace, a lovely, fragile-looking girl, about seventeen years of age. They were spending the winter in Italy in the vain hope that its warm climate and sunny skies might restore the health of their child, impaired as it was by the winds and piercing cold of Maine, for their home was in Portland. But the malady which had fastened itself upon the poor girl had taken its worst form, and was hopeless from its very commencement, as the physicians who had recommended the European journey well knew. Save to the deluded eyes of her loving and hopeful parents, her days were numbered, so swift and fatal had been the ravages of consumption upon her delicate frame.

When she first met Captain Conway, however, one of the delusive improvements characteristic of that most deceptive disease had taken place, and she was brilliant with hope and happiness, and that hectic bloom which looks so like the flush of returning health. Beautiful, lovely and intelligent, she was just the companion that Charles Conway needed to fill up the intervals of time which his courtship of Clara Harwell left vacant. He soon contrived to establish himself on an intimate footing with the Marshalls. He brought Mr Marshall the American papers and the current magazines; he acted as interpreter for Mrs Marshall when she sallied forth on some shopping expedition in search of Florentine mosaics, alabaster statuettes and old guipure lace; and he rode with Grace, read to her, sang to her, and talked to her on indifferent subjects, while his large blue eyes were eloquent of love. And she, poor girl, was radiantly happy, and dreamed of a future of restored health and wedded bliss, while her parents smiled approval, and were charmed to see her so well and joyous.

One morning, late in the month of February, he came to the apartments occupied by the Marshalls to announce to them his intention of going to Rome for a short time. He expected to be away about two weeks, he said—left some of Chopin's waltzes, which he wished Grace to learn before his return, and a volume of selections from the modern Italian poets for her perusal. Ten days later Mrs Marshall received a letter from him, informing her that he was on the eve of departing for America. He hoped that he might soon see them in New York, and trusted they might be there at the time of his wedding, which was to take place in May. "Probably," he wrote, "you have not yet heard of my engagement to Miss Harwell. Parental opposition separated us for a time, but Mr Harwell, finding that his daughter's affections were not to coerced, has at last given his consent to our union, and I am the happiest of men. I know that my charming friend, Miss Grace, will rejoice to hear of my good fortune. Pray present my compliments to her, and tell her that I long to make her acquainted with my Clara. I know that they are destined to be very intimate friends some day. We sail next Saturday from Liverpool in the Scotia, and I will gladly take charge of any letters or parcels you may wish to send home, provided you forward them at once."

Such was the letter which dealt Grace Marshall her coup de grace. At the best she could not have lived long; the deadly malady had fastened itself with too cruel a certainty upon her delicate frame. But she might have been spared for some months longer to her doting parents—might have passed away calmly, peacefully and resigned, had Charles Conway never crossed her path. As it was, a wild desire possessed her to see his face once more. Amid the fever and weakness, and violent attacks of coughing which marked this final and fatal relapse of her illness, she made but one request, uttered but one cry: "Let us go home; let me only see him once, just once again, before I die." The physicians shook their heads, and predicted the worst effects from a sea voyage undertaken at that season of the year; but they all knew that the poor girl's condition was hopeless, and they finally united in counselling the unhappy parents to accede to her wishes.

They travelled by short stages to Germany, and then to Hamburg, where they embarked on one of the German steamships for America. Grace rallied so much during the first part of the voyage that there was every hope of her living to reach her native shores. But when the vessel was within twelve hours' sail of New York, a storm arose; the violent rolling of the ship was too severe for the enfeebled frame of the invalid, and brought on a fearful spasm of coughing, in which a blood vessel was ruptured, and Grace Marshall expired within sight of the lights of Sandy Hook. She was quiet and resigned at the last; and I only mentioned Charley Conway's name to make one request concerning him. "I want him to come to my funeral," she whispered almost with her dying breath. "He will remember me a little longer if he sees me in my coffin." And Mr Marshall, with clenched hands and scowling brow, swore that he should come, that he would make him come, did he dare to refuse.

But Charley Conway had no idea of refusing. He was too much of a gentleman, too fond of having everything go smoothly and pleasantly, to do anything which might lead to a disagreeable state of affairs. He answered the curt, cold note in which Mr Marshall acquainted him with Grace's last request and the wish of her family that it might be granted, with a charming letter of condolence, addressed to Mrs Marshall, wherein he spoke so feelingly of his lovely little friend, of the pleasant hours he had passed in her society, and the grief that he felt for her loss, that the sorrowing parents would have felt half inclined to forgive him had they not looked upon him as the immediate cause of her death. And so the day of the funeral arrived, and Grace Marshall's last wish was realized: Charles Conway came and looked on her as she lay in her coffin, attired in a loose plaited robe of white cashmere, and with rosebuds and camelias in her waxen hands. He not being wholy marble, was really somewhat moved by the pitiful sight, and the face of the dead girl, whose last hours of life he had wantonly embittered, probably haunted him as the memory of her days of comparative health and beauty had never done. And this was the face which looked on him with such startling effects from the photograph that I had given him.

Now I might end my story here, and leave you all under the impression that a spectre sat to me for its photograph. But my story has a sequel, and I prefer the more real, but less startling denouement.

One day in the following autumn, one of Mrs Hyde's boarders, a young physician named Dr. Hale, came to my establishment for the purpose of having some old daguerreotypes copied. After settling price, size and other necessary preliminaries, he took up the book of specimens which lay upon the table and commenced to turn over the leaves. At last he came to the photograph of my mysterious sitter.

"Why, this is Miss Marshall," he exclaimed in surprise. "I did not know that she had ever had her photograph taken."

"Did you know her?" I asked.

"Certainly I did," was the reply. "She boarded with Mrs Hyde all last winter, and I was called to attend her in two of her attacks, by the maiden aunt who has charge of her."

"I thought she was dead!" was my involuntary exclamation.

"Her twin-sister, Grace, died about a year ago, but Julia Marshall, the original of this picture, is alive at present, and as well as she ever will be in this world. She boarded at Mrs Hyde's all last winter to be under medical treatment, but no physician ever has cured, or ever will cure epilepsy. When she left New York last March to return home, she was not one particle better than when she came."

Thus simply and naturally was the mystery explained.

During a subsequent conversation with Dr. Hale, I learned the following particulars:

Julia and Grace Marshall were, as he had before stated, twin-sisters, and resembled each other during their childhood, as closely as twins usually do. When Julia was about six years of age, she was seized with convulsive attacks, which proved to be epilepsy in its worst form. All that medical skill could effect was tried, but without avail. The malady remained unchecked, and the paroxysms soon became so frequent and so violent as to necessitate the entire seclusion of the invalid from the world. She was placed under the care of a maiden aunt, Mrs Maine, and thus, though she was within easy reach of her family, she was entirely withdrawn from observation; so that few save most intimate friends of the Marshall family were aware of the existence of this sorely afflicted daughter. As years rolled on, Julia grew in stature and in intellect, but the fearful disease with which she was afflicted affected her brain, and so warped without destroying her mind that, without being actually insane, she exhibited many of the peculiar traits of insanity. Prominent amongst these was a taste for malicious mischief, joined to a great degree of cunning. She had loved her sister very dearly, and seen and wept over her lifeless form as she lay arrayed for the grave, and overheard her parents' bitter comment on the conduct of Charles Conway, and the last request made by her sister concerning him. She frequently announced her intention of giving him a lesson some day, and certainly she had chosen an effectual method of doing so. But why she had chosen that particular method or course it was impossible to say. Probably from the window of her boarding house she had seen Captain Conway enter my establishment, and had then conceived the idea which she afterward so cleverly carried into execution. Her ghastly appearance and the bluish, corpse-like hue of her complexion, which had so astounded me, and so aided in carrying out the delusion, were due partly to her disease, and partly to a medicine used in its treatment—a preparation of nitrate of silver, which lodges in the tissues of the skin and imparts to it a permanent bluish tint.

I don't know if Captain Conway ever learned the truth respecting my ghostly sitter. I certainly took no trouble whatever to inform him of it. "Let him," I thought, "imagine that the ghost of Grace Marshall did really thus come back to terrify him. It may do him good; it may learn him a lesson." But I do not think it did, for I hear that Captain Conway is at present one of the most notorious flirts in New York.

MORE RITUALISM IN ENGLAND.

A fresh Ritualistic extravaganza is reported from Brighton. The occasion was again a harvest festival, and the proceedings, though less ridiculous than those at Haydock, were similarly wild. The chapel seems to have been converted into a Floral Hall, very pretty, and as unlike a church as possible. A procession formed one of the principal parts of the "function;" but, as there were no fields, it had to be content with displaying itself in hop-gardens and orchards into which the church was converted. Here, however, were to be seen in all their glory the little boys in scarlet tunics under white surplices, and the singing men with blue hoods, and the acolytes with lighted candles, the thurifer, the cross bearer, the "lectors," the "cantors," the deacon, the sub-deacon, and "Officiating Priest." With cross and banner, and amid the fumes of incense, they paraded the aisles, singing, no doubt to good music, a most meaningless and clumsy hymn. The service was not only adorned with the usual "postures and impostures," but almost seems to betray a set design to flout the Prayer-book and insult the State. Except from mere wantonness, one does not see the purpose of pronouncing the Absolution sitting instead of standing, and in omitting the reading of the Commandments. But the disloyalty would be outrageous, if it were not silly, when the "Officiating Priest" expresses his indifference to the "State Prayers" of the Liturgy by deliberately turning his back on them, leaving them to be read by an unordained member of the choir, while he retires to his dressing-room and arrays himself in more gorgeous apparel for the Communion Service. Amid the blaze of four-and-twenty candles and clouds of incense, the sermon is reached, and speedily dismissed; a kind of dumb show follows, in which the ringing of a little bell, as in Roman Catholic churches, announces the elevation of the Host, and at length, having gone through the performance to the admiration of the spectators, the long line of acolytes, ministers, "choir," and clergy retire into the "sacristy," in solemn and processional order, while the congregation, as they depart, are supplied, in the most approved "Catholic" fashion, with holy water at the doors.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER.
ITS EFFECT IS MIRACULOUS.
It is a perfect and wonderful article. Cures baldness. Makes hair grow. A better dressing than any "oil" or "pomatum." Softens brash, dry and wiry hair into Beautiful Silken Tresses. But, above all, the great wonder is the rapidity with which it restores GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOUR.
The whitest and worst-looking hair resumes its youthful beauty by its use. It does not dye the hair, but strikes at the root, and fills it with new life and colouring matter.
The first application will do good; you will see the NATURAL COLOUR returning every day,
AND BEFORE YOU KNOW IT,
the old gray, discoloured appearance of the hair will be gone, giving place to lustrous, shining and beautiful locks.
Ask for Hall's Sicilian Hair Renewer; no other article is at all like it in effect.
See that each bottle has our private Government Stamp over the top of the bottle. All others are imitations.
For sale by all druggists.

Coughs and Colds.
Sudden changes of climate are sources of Pulmonary, Bronchial, and Asthmatic affections. Experience having proved that simple remedies often act speedily and certainly when taken in the early stages of the disease, recourse should at once be had to "Brown's Bronchial Troches," or Lozenges. Few are aware of the importance of checking a cough, or "common cold," in its first stage. That which in the beginning would yield to a mild remedy, if neglected soon attacks the Lungs. "Brown's Bronchial Troches," or Cough Lozenges, allay irritation which induces coughing, having a DIRECT influence on the affected parts. As there are imitations, be sure to obtain the genuine. Sold by all dealers in Medicines at 25 cents a box.

Mothers! Mothers!! Mothers!!!
Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of Mrs WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on the face of the earth who has ever used it, who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe to use in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price 25 cents. Sold everywhere.
Be sure and call for
"Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup," having the fac-simile of "Curtis & Perkins" on the outside wrapper. All others are base imitations.

Philosophy of Marriage.
