FOR HONOR'S SAKE

BY B. L. FARJEON.

"Like his brother," I observed, "Mr. James Rutland, who was on Layton's trial. Those traits evidently run in the family. Now, as to his wife."

"A gentle and amiable lady," said Dr. Daincourt, "some eight or ten years younger than her husband, but her hair is already grayer than his; it is almost white."

"She and her daughter resemble each other," I remarked.

"Yes; and there is also on the mother's face an expression of devotion and self sacrifice. Her eyes continually overflowed when we were speaking of her daughter."

"Not so the father's eyes?"

"No; but he showed no want of feeling."

"Still, doctor," I said, "you gather from your one visit to the house that he is the master of it—in every sense, I mean."

"Most certainly the master."

"Ruling," I remarked, "with a rod of iron."

"You put ideas into my head," said Dr. Daincourt in a somewhat helpless tone.

"If they clash with your own, say so."

"They do not clash with my own, but I am not prone so suddenly to take such decided views. I should say you are right, Bainbridge, and that in his house Mr. Rutland's will is law."

"Would that be likely," I asked, "to account in any way for the expression of self sacrifice you observed on the faces of mother and daughter?"

"It might be so," said Dr. Daincourt thoughtfully.

"Proceed now," I said, "and tell me all that passed."

"But little remains to tell," said Dr. Daincourt. "I informed the parents that their daughter was suffering more from mental than from physical causes; that it was clear to me that there was a heavy trouble upon her mind, and that, until her trouble was removed, there was but faint hope of her getting well and strong. 'I am speaking in the dark,' I said to the parents, 'and while I remain in ignorance of the cause, it is almost impossible for me to prescribe salutary remedies.' 'Can you do nothing for her?' asked the father. 'Can you not give her some medicine?' 'Yes, I can give her medicine,' I replied, 'but nothing that would be likely to be of benefit to her. Indeed, the medicine already in her room is such as would be ordinarily prescribed by a medical man who had not reached the core of the patient's disease.' 'If she goes on as she is going on now,' said the father, 'what will be the result?' 'Her strength is failing fast,' I replied; 'what little reserve she has to draw upon will soon be exhausted. If she goes on as she is going on now I am afraid there will be but one result.' The mother burst into tears; the father fixed his steady gaze upon me, but I saw his lips quiver. 'We have called you in, Dr. Daincourt,' he said, 'because we have heard of wonderful cures you have effected in patients who have suffered from weak nerves. I have been happily successful,' I said, 'in effecting cures, but I have never yet succeeded where a secret has been hidden from me.' At these words the mother raised her hands imploringly to her husband. 'Do you think that a secret is being hidden from you in this case?' asked the father. 'It is not for me to say,' I replied, 'it is simply my duty to acquaint you with the fact that your daughter's disease is mental, and that her condition is critical. Until I learn the cause of her grief I am powerless to aid her.' 'Will you oblige me by calling to-morrow?' asked the father, after a slight pause. 'Yes,' I said, preparing to depart, 'I will call in the afternoon, and, if you wish, will see your daughter again.' He expressed his thanks in courteous terms, and I took my leave. I should have come here earlier, Bainbridge, to relate this to you, but I have had other serious cases to attend to. A doctor's time is not his own, you know."

"I have something to tell you, doctor," I said, "with reference to your new patient, which will interest you. Mabel Rutland was once engaged to be married to Edward Layton, and I believe there was a deep and profound attachment between them."

"You startle me," he said, "and have given me food for thought."

When he bade me good night it was with the determination to extract, if possible, from Mabel Rutland's parents some information respecting her mental condition, which might be used to her benefit. For my part, I must confess to the hope, unreasonable as it may appear, that he may also be successful in obtaining some information which will assist me in the elucidation of the mystery upon which I am employed.

Cable message from Mr. Bainbridge, London, to Mr. Archibald Laing, U. S.

"Give me what particulars you can of Miss Mabel Rutland and her parents, and of her brothers and sisters, if she has any."

Cable message from Mr. Archibald Laing, U. S., to Mr. Bainbridge, London.

"Miss Mabel Rutland has no sisters. She has only a twin brother, Eustace, to whom she was passionately attached and voteed. This brother and sister and their parents comprise the family. Mr. Rutland is of an implacable and relentless disposition, impatient of contradiction and obstinate to a degree. These qualities were exercised in my favor some years ago, when I paid court to Miss Rutland, in the hope of making her my wife. Her father would have forced her into a marriage with me, but when I could no longer doubt that she loved Edward Layton, I preferred to retire rather than render her unhappy. By so doing I think I won her esteem, and it is for her sake I wish Layton to be cleared of the charge brought against him. It is my belief that she still loves him, and she must be suffering terribly. If Layton is convicted it will break her heart. I know very little of her brother Eustace. He was at Oxford when I was in London, and I met him only once or twice. Mrs. Rutland is a sweet lady, gentle mannered, kindly hearted, and I fear domineered over by her husband."

III.

I thank you for the information contained in your last cable. It gives me an insight into the generous motives which have prompted you to step forward on Edward Layton's behalf, and I am gratified in being associated with you in the cause. When a counsel finds himself en rapport with his client, it is generally of assistance to him; he works with a better spirit.

Three days have passed since I wrote and dispatched to you the second portion of the narrative of my proceedings and progress. I was waiting anxiously for something to occur—I could not exactly say what—which would serve as an absolute stepping stone. Something has occurred which, although I have not yet discovered the key to it, will, I believe, prove to be of the utmost importance. You will understand later on what I mean by my use of the word "key;" and when I tell you that this which I call the stepping stone is nothing more or less than the nine of hearts, you will give me credit for my prescience on the first production of that card in the criminal court. I felt convinced that it would be no insignificant factor in the elucidation of the Layton mystery.

I may say here that the progress we have made is entirely due to Dr. Daincourt. What I should have done had he not been unexpectedly called in to our assistance, it is difficult to say. I should not have been idle, but it is scarcely likely that, within so short a time, my actions would have led to the point we have now reached. Dr. Daincourt has allowed himself to be prompted by me to a certain extent, and his interest in his beautiful patient has been intensified by the friendship existing between us, and by the esteem we both entertain for Edward Layton.

In accordance with the promise Dr. Daincourt gave to Mr. Rutland, he called upon that gentleman on the day following his first visit to the house. During the interval Miss Rutland's condition had not improved; it had, indeed, grown worse. There was an aggravation of the feverish symptoms, and her speech was wild and incoherent. Perhaps it would be more correct to say that it was wild and incoherent to those who were assembled at her bedside. I hold to the theory that there is a method in dreams, and I also hold to the theory that there is a method in the wildest utterances produced by the wildest delirium. I speak, of course, as a lawyer. Dr. Daincourt's position with respect to Miss Rutland was that of a physician. Had I heard the words uttered by Miss Rutland in her favored state, I do not doubt that my legal training would have enabled me to detect what was hidden from Dr. Daincourt and the young lady's parents.

During this second visit to Miss Rutland, her father requested Dr. Daincourt to give him a private interview, in the course of which he elicited from the doctor an accentuation of the views which Dr. Daincourt had expressed on the previous day. Mr. Rutland made a vain attempt to combat these views. He would have been glad to be assured that his daughter was suffering from a physical and not from a mental malady—but Dr. Daincourt was positive, and was not to be moved from his conviction. He emphasized his inability to treat the case with any hope of success, and he repeated his belief, if Miss Rutland were allowed to continue in her present condition without any effort being made to arrive at the cause of her mental suffering, that there could be but one result—death before the end of the year.

At the commencement of this interview between Mr. Rutland and Dr. Daincourt Mrs. Rutland was not present, but after it had lasted some twenty minutes or so her anxiety became so overpowering that she knocked at the door of the room in which the conversation was taking place and begged to be admitted. The issue at stake was so grave that Mr. Rutland could not refuse, and thus it was that she was present when Dr. Daincourt spoke in plain terms of the serious condition of his beautiful patient. The mother's distress was pitiable, but it appeared to produce no impression upon her husband.

"And yet," said Dr. Daincourt, in narrating the affair to me, "I am sure that Mr. Rutland was inwardly suffering, and I am also sure that he has a sincere affection for his daughter."

The interview terminated by Mr. Rutland requesting Dr. Daincourt to call again the next day, to which request the doctor gave a reluctant assent.

He called on the following day, with the same result. Again he saw the patient; again he had an interview with Mr. Rutland, at which Mrs. Rutland was present; again he emphasized his view of the young lady's condition; and again Mr. Rutland requested him to pay another visit upon his daughter. Dr. Daincourt objected. He told Mr. Rutland that, as matters stood, his visits were useless, and that in the absence of necessary information it was his distinct wish to be relieved from them.

"And I feel it my duty," he said to the father, "to inform you that if you intend to do nothing further than it seems to me is your present intention, you are playing with your daughter's life."

These were grave words to use, but Dr. Daincourt is no ordinary man. His knowledge and experience lead him intuitively to correct conclusions, and in his professional capacity he will not be trifled with.

"In these circumstances," he said to Mr. Rutland, "I must beg of you to summon some other physician in whom you have greater confidence."

"I have the fullest confidence in you," said Mr. Rutland.

"You have not shown it," was Dr. Daincourt's rejoinder. "It is as though you have determined that you, and not I, shall be your daughter's physician."

However, he allowed himself to be prevailed upon to pay Miss Rutland yet another visit. But he gave his consent only upon the express stipulation that it should be his last unless Mr. Rutland placed him in possession of information which would enable him to fully understand the case.

"I come now to this fourth interview, which was pregnant with results.

Upon presenting himself at the house he was received by Mrs. Rutland, who said to him:

"My husband has consented that I should tell you all you desire to know with respect to our dear child."

"You have prevailed upon him to consent," said Dr. Daincourt.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Rutland. "I have, thank God! prevailed upon him to consent. Dear doctor, you will save my child, will you not?"

"I will do all that lies in my power," said Dr. Daincourt.

"What is it you wish to know?" asked Mrs. Rutland.

"Everything that concerns your daughter," said Dr. Daincourt, "with respect to her disposition, habits, likings and affections. She has a terrible weight upon her mind, and you must certainly have some suspicion of the cause. You may have more than a suspicion, you may have a positive knowledge. You must hide nothing from me. Unless you are prepared to be absolutely and entirely frank in your disclosures, I cannot undertake to continue my visits. You are her mother—you love her tenderly?"

"I love her with all my heart and soul," said Mrs. Rutland, weeping. "If my daughter is taken from me I shall not care to live."

"In deep sincerity, then," said Dr. Daincourt, "I declare to you that you may be acting as your daughter's enemy instead of her friend if you do not open your heart and mind to me freely and without restraint. Relate as briefly as you can, without omitting important points, the story of her life."

It was a simple, touching story which Mrs. Rutland disclosed, fragrant with all that is sweetest in woman. The Rutlands have but two children, Mabel and Eustace, who came into the world within a few minutes of each other. Between these children existed a most profound and devoted love, and to tear Eustace away from Mabel was like tearing the girl's heartstrings. The lad's love was the weaker of the two, as is usually the case, but he nevertheless adored his sister, who repaid him tenfold for all the affection he lavished upon her. They grew up together, shared each other's pleasures, had secret and innocent methods of communicating with each other which afforded them intense delight, and were inseparable until they reached the age of 18, when Eustace went to college. Hitherto his studies had been conducted at home, a home of peace and harmony and love; for, stern and implacable as Mr. Rutland was, he loved his children and his wife; but he loved something else equally well—his honor and his good name. While Eustace was absent at college, he and Mabel corresponded regularly.

"But," said the mother, "neither my husband nor myself was ever able to understand Eustace's letters to his sister. They were always written in the form of mystery letters. It had been their favorite amusement when they were children to discover and invent new methods of corresponding with each other, of which only they possessed the secret. 'There, mamma,' Mabel would say, with a laugh, giving me one of my dear Eustace's letters from college, 'read that!' But it might as well have been written in Greek for anything that I could make of it. Words and figures were jumbled together, without any meaning in them that I could discover, and the entire page was a perfect puzzle. Then Mabel would take the letter from me, and read it off as easily as possible; and I remember her saying once, 'If Eustace and I ever have any real secrets, mamma, we shall be able to tell them to each other through the post, without any person in the world being one bit the wiser.' Little did I think that the time would arrive when her words would bear a fatal meaning."

Sussex defeated Kent by 7 wickets. The scores were: Kent 90 and 333, Sussex 293 and 131 for three wickets. For the losers Mr. A. J. Thornton played brilliantly for 137. For the winners Quaife put together 91 and 23, Mr. W. Newham 22 and not out 44.

In a match between the M. C. C. and Ground v. Richmond, the former went in first and put together 468. Mr. De Trafford scored 194 runs, in which there were six 5's, nine 4's and fourteen 3's. Richmond had two wickets down for 11 runs when time was called, and the match was left unfinished.

The Notts v. Lancashire match resulted in the defeat of the latter county by an inning and 86 runs. For the winners Shrewsbury made 130 and Gunn 78, out of a total of 375. The losers only succeeded in getting 153 and 136, to which Mr. J. Eccles contributed 55 and 9, and Briggs 12 and 50. Mr. J. A. Dixon, for the winners, accomplished the "hat trick" by bowling Briggs, Richardson and Yate, with successive balls.

Surrey has defeated Yorkshire by an inning and 15 runs. The match was for the benefit of George Ulyett, the famous Yorkshire professional, and as over 12,000 people witnessed the match it is safe to say that he received a very substantial reception. The Surrey men, having won the toss, went in first and put together 301, to which Mr. J. Shuter contributed 61, Mr. W. W. Read 64, Lohman 54 and Wood 70. For the losers Ulyett made 0 and 41, Bates 22 and 20, and Wade not out 15 and 57. Lohman, for the winning side, bowled magnificently, and took in the match 8 wickets for 82 runs.

Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is a speedy cure for dysentery, diarrhœa, cholera, summer complaint, sea sickness and complaints incidental to children teething. It gives immediate relief to those suffering from the effects of indiscretion in eating unripe fruit, cucumbers, etc. It acts with wonderful rapidity, and never fails to conquer the disease. No one need fear cholera if they have a bottle of this medicine convenient.

The match between Gloucestershire and Yorkshire resulted in a draw. The former county scored 369 and 338 and the latter 300. Mr. W. G. Grace scored 92 and 183 not out, which speaks for itself. It is the most remarkable thing he has done since his great season in 1876. In his second innings he went in first wicket down with the total at 4 and kept in for the remainder of the day. He was in for 5 hours 25 minutes, and did not give a single chance. His figures were twenty-one 4's, four 3's, nineteen 2's and forty-nine singles. He was ably assisted by Mr. A. Newham, who put together 56. For Yorkshire Ulyett made 104, Hall 70 and Bates 84.

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints who might have been saved if the proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellog's Dysentry Cordial, the medicine that never fails to affect a cure. Those who have used it say it acts promptly, and thoroughly subdues pain and disease.

Surrey has been defeated by Middlesex by 9 wickets, and has consequently lost the lead in the race for the championship. The great county now stands on a level with Nottinghamshire, which is fighting hard to retain the title of champion county. The victory of Middlesex was due entirely to its strong batting. The Surrey men only obtained 176 and 240 to their opponents' 339 and 78 for the loss of one wicket. For the winners Mr. A. E. Stoddart obtained 85, Mr. S. W. Scott 99 and 33 not out, Mr. J. G. Walker 59 and A. J. Webbe 20 and 33 not out. For the losers Henderson put together 29 and 43 not out, Mr. W. W. Read 45 and 0, Mr. J. Shuter 26 and 100, Lohman 14 and 24, and Bowley not out 8 and 33. Burton was the most successful bowler for Middlesex, claiming 8 wickets for 124 runs.

Holloway's Pills.

Factory Operatives and Workers in manufactories.—The remarkable remedies which have been discovered and perfected by Thomas Holloway, and which have for more than forty years been successfully used in every quarter of the globe, are especially useful in all the manfold ailments which afflict those whom by reason of their occupations are confined for years, or all their lives, in crowded buildings and workshops. Holloway's Pills and Ointment are associated remedies, the former restoring the vital powers when diminished, and always acting as an efficient blood purifier, whilst the latter relieves local maladies, checks inflammation, and acts as a cleansing and healing agent in cases of bad legs, bad breasts, ulcers and unhealty sores of all kinds.

Advice To Mothers.

MRS WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, for children teething, is the prescription of one of the best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and has been used for forty years with never-failing success by millions of mothers for their children. During the process of teething its value is incalculable. It relieves the child from pain, cures dysentery and diarrhœa, griping in the bowels, and wind-colic. By giving health to the child it rests the mother. Price

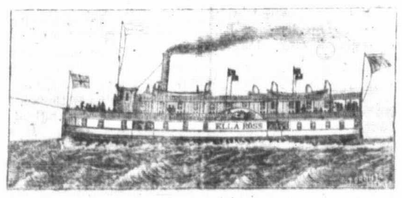
THE IRON PALACE STEAMER

ELLA ROSS



(W. GARRETT, MASTER),

Has commenced her regular weekly excursion trips from Montreal via Ottawa and Rideau Canal to Kingston. The Ella Ross leaves Kingston at 5 p.m. Saturday, remains over Sunday at Thousand Island Park, calling at Alexandria Bay each Monday morning. This is the only passenger steamer making the round trip. As this is one of the most popular routes on Canadian waters, accommodation will be at a premium, and those wishing a cosy, comfortable trip would do well to go early. Round trip only $14, Meals and Berth included.

WHY? WHY?

Has Our Summer Sale Been So Successful?

Because the public has found out that we make no promises we cannot fulfil.

Because when we advertise an article at a price we have it.

Because when we say it is all wool, it is all wool.

Because the excellence of our goods makes every sale an advertisement for us.

Because we would rather not sell than have a customer dissatisfied.

During Our Sale we can save you twenty-five per cent. on every dollar spent with us.

Call and convince yourself.
