MOLASSES FOR HENS

Almost every poultryman finds it necessary to give the birds epsom salts occasionally, in order to overcome constipation, as the result of heavy grain feeding and close confinement. The bad feature of giving salts is that it tears down the calcium in the body. Molasses in the poultry ration will do the same thing as epsom salts, and will not have the bad effects of salts. Besides molasses is extremely rich in vitamin B, rich in minerals, and ranks high in digestibility. It is richer in vitamin B than some yeasts, and is one of the few ingredients used in poultry rations not deficient in potash.

READ THE SMALL ADVTS.

To the Electors of South-East Grey:

We won in a hard fight—in a busy time—in the face of a landslide over the Dominion—and in spite of overconfidence. We did well.

I deeply appreciate the support of the majority of the Electors of South-East Grey and the faithful work of those who bore the burden and heat of the day. I shall try to be worthy.

Sincerely,
AGNES C. MACPHAIL

PROPER STABLING CAPACITY

While the cows are out on pasture is a good time to make any necessary alterations in the cow stable. The length and width of cow stalls should be adapted to the size of the cows in the herd. In most stables there are cows that are uncomfortable from standing in stalls that are too short and others that are needlessly dirty from standing in stalls that are too long. Here are a few general dimensions for cow stables: For Ayrshires the stall length should be from 54 to 58 inches. A good plan is to have the platform gradually lengthened from one end of the stable to the other and then stable the cows according to length.

NOTICE

The Artemesia & Osprey Shipping Association is shipping stock every Tuesday from Flesherton station. Trucking of stock is also done.

To the Electors of South-East Grey:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

Another election has passed into history and the results indicate a change in the riding. Although not elected, I appreciate the change in sentiment as a desire to return to the two-party system of government.

My sincere thanks are tendered to those of the electors who expressed their confidence in my candidature. I have fought a fight which I honestly believe to be in the best interests of the people of Canada, and have no regrets other than the disappointment which will be felt by those who actively supported my cause.

To the host of good friends and active workers, who rendered wholehearted service in the campaign, my thanks are especially directed. The result of the election throughout the Dominion will be reecived by them as consolation for our failure to achieve success in this constituency.

Yours sincerely,

L. G. CAMPBELL
