COMPULSORY INSURANCE

The New Ontario Safety Responsibility Law comes into effect on September, 1 and it is up to every motorist to secure insurance or a bond covering personal liability and property damage if he or she becomes involved in an accident and is required to pay for such damage thereby caused. If such person has not secured insurance and if called upon to pay or such accident and is unable to do so the driving and motor vehicle permits and car markers are confiscated until such time as restriction is made and financial responsibility proven to the satisfaction of the department. The best way for the motorist to establish responsibility is to file with the Department a certificate of insurance to show his personal responsibility, so that in event of a conviction for an offence under the act, or failure to pay a judgment, his license would not be immediately suspended. No doubt this law will see the elimination of many of the old relics of cars that travel the highways, driven by persons of no financial responsibility. All motorists, for their own benefit and safety, should see to it at once that they are covered by insurance as laid down by the Department in the new act.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Now that the election turmoil is over, we must all get ready for fall ploughing and preparation for improving business in all its manifestations.

Curves on the main highways have always been regarded by the Provincial Department as dangerous and efforts have been made to eliminate these as far as possible. However, the many curves on the King's Highway from Flesherton to Dundalk are still very dangerous and each week sees one or more accidents of cars turning over into the ditch. Speed may or may not have a tendency to ditch the cars, but nevertheless the road is dangerous, and, in our idea, the curves should be made more sweeping than at the present time.

The Principal of Woodbridge public school, with a picnicking party of 35 cadets, have been spending a holiday camping in the Kimberley Valley. They are loud in their praise of the scenic beauty of this earthly paradise. One may travel far before coming across a more captivating territory than which is to be found along the Beaver Valley and the rolling country on both sides of the great valley which gives bed to the sparkling waters that supply the electric light and power for many thousands of our population. Indeed all around us are to be found abundance of camping grounds for holiday lovers. We do not need to go far afield for room to recreate. Nature has indeed been kind to us and visitors are always welcome.

The New Prime Minister

Interesting anecdotes regarding the life and experiences of Canada's new Prime Minister—Hon. R. B. Bennett—are reaching the public through the industry of the correspondents at Ottawa and elsewhere. We learn, for example, that as a boy Mr. Bennett was studious and non-Combative, an omniferous reader, and a very early and persistent talker and debater. It is also set forth that his father was a village carpenter in the province of New Brunswick, and that the province now proudly gives for the first time, a Dominion Premier. Then it is claimed that neither at school nor since has the New Prime Minister contracted any bad habits, or even become addicted to the use of tobacco, snuff, beer or whisky. That there may be no mistake on these points, one of these ferriting news mongers last week hied himself to the Maritime Provinces, and there looked up all of Premier Bennett's ancient relations of which he could get an audience. His aunt, now aged 95, rejoiced that her nephew Richard had now become a great man, and volunteered the information that she believed him to be a Christian, and hoped the man he beat was likewise orthodox. She was especially pleased that her brilliant nephew had succeeded so well, as he had been very kind to her and to other members of his family. Of his fortune he had generously provided for them for life, and never failed to come to see them when in his native province. There seems no reason, indeed, to doubt that Mr. Bennett is a very rich man, for in the course of the campaign, "he himself hath said it," and he has been tolerably liberal, so far, in sharing his riches, both with his relations and with his political friends. Ottawa correspondents tell us that he contributed at least half a million dollars to the Conservative campaigning fund in recent election, and there are many politicians, who are ready to exclaim, "Long may he wave." We are told further that the new Premier made his fortune easily, but this is only true in part. He had a hard battle in obtaining his scholastic education and the early years of his life in the Northwest, where he went as a young lawyer, to Alberta, were just as strenuous as those of any pioneer professional man. But he worked hard and succeeded, was elected a member of the Legislature, then chosen as the only Conservative M.P. in the Northwest, but was regarded as able and adaptable enough to command the votes of his fellow delegates to the Conservative convention at Winnipeg and thus became leader. It was while serving in Parliament in the war years that his greatest good fortune came to him. A schoolmate of his had married one of the big industrial magnates of the capital. He died and the widow desiring expert legal advice in administering the estate left her, it was natural that she should turn to her now noted schoolmate. The estate came out so well that the widow insisted on paying her counsel by a substantial block of gilt edged stock. The sequel was even more interesting, they tell us for the widow, dying at a comparatively early age, left to her faithful friend and lawyer the greater portion of her remaining properties, unlike the generality of premiers of the past, the new First Minister thus lives on Easy Street, being a man of fortune, and a bachelor. His age is 60, but he is well preserved and does not look it.

BREAST FEEDING

If the nursing mother is healthy and if she is eating the proper foods her milk will almost surely contain all of the constituents which her child requires for proper nutrition.

Breast milk meets the needs of the child in a remarkable manner. This is not surprising when we consider that it is the natural food of infant. Breast feeding is not an entirely foolproof method of feeding, however, and in order to carry it out properly, the mother requires to give some thought to the subject.

The mother, if she intends to nurse her baby properly must attend to her general health, which of course, includes attention to her diet. If the mother is careless as regards her own needs, she is doing harm, not only to herself but, indirectly, to her child through her milk.

The nursing mother requires fresh air, sunshine, rest and exercise in order to maintain her normal health. She should eat a well balanced meal, making sure that it includes the daily use of milk and milk products, green leafy vegetables, and fruits. Attention to the proper habits of healthy living is essential for the nursing mother and her child.

She should feed by the clock. Experience has proved, beyond question that regularity in feeding should be observed. The time for feeding is the hour set as shown by the clock, not when the mother guesses that it is feeding time, or when the baby cries. Regularity in feeding is necessary for the baby; irregularity is the cause of digestive upsets. Regularity in feeding also helps to maintain the supply of breast-milk.

No baby should be weaned unless the necessity for depriving him of his natural food has been carefully considered. Mothers, for some unknown reason, very often get the idea that their milk is not suitable. They do not know, or they have forgotten that the best artificial feeding is only a substitute and is never just as good as the natural method.

If there is not sufficient breast-milk, then the proper thing to do is to supplement the quantity there is with some artificial feeding. In this way, the baby receives the benefit of all the natural food available and is given what additional food he needs. There is no reason why the infant should not continue at the breast while he has supplementary feedings, some breast milk being so much better than none at all.

Satisfactory breast-feeding depends upon the mother's taking care of her health, particularly her diet, on her confidence and determination that she can and will breast-feed her baby, and on her resolution that she will feed with absolute regularity by the clock.

PORTLAW

Sunday last was a red letter day for Mount Zion church, when special re-opening services were held morning and evening after extensive improvements and decorations had been made to the exterior and interior of the building. Rev. Mr. Pope preached able sermons at both services. A goodly number came a distance, specially to again worship and mingle their voices in praise, in the old home church; and it was inspiring as these old walls that had been tastefully beautified, resounded with the heart-tuned melody of familiar voices. These people rejoiced to see Mount Zion put on new vestments, new activity and new strength. Mr. Thomas Taylor of Flesherton has not forgotten the church of his boyhood and later years. He was down last week and built a cement platform. He knows how to do a job of this kind and as a final touch Mr. and Mrs. H. V. Gaudin of Toronto contributed matting which was laid in the aisles of the church.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Woods and friend of Toronto visited with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Taylor.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Jamieson, two sons and Mrs. Kerr and son of Toronto spent the week end with Mr. and Mrs. Jamieson here.

Mrs. Lawrence Lyons visited Paisley friends last week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W Lyons visited with Toronto relatives last week.

Rev. and Mrs. Rumble of Toronto spent the week end with Mr. and Mrs. Luther Love. Mr. Rumble was stationed at Mount Zion some years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Walker were called to Toronto on account of the serious illness of the former's mother.

Mr. Robert Blakey had the misfortune to have his house and contents destroyed by fire on Sunday evening. No particulars are at hand.

Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Malcolm, son and daughter of Collingwood visited at the McKenzie home recently.

Master Lloyd Little gave a birthday party on Saturday afternoon to a number of his young friends, it being Lloyd's fifteenth birthday.

Mr. Paul Churney has sold his farm on the centre line to Dever Bros., and is moving to near Hamilton, where he has purchased another farm.

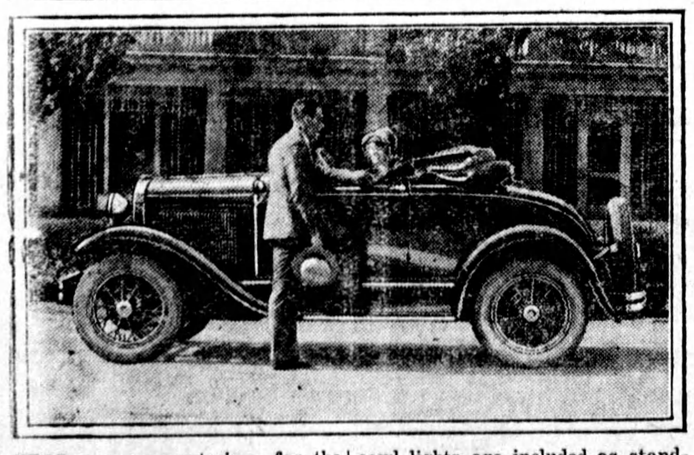
Ford Convertible Cabriolet



FOR summer motoring, for the dash to the club or for the shopping tour, thousands of women are choosing the new Ford convertible cabriolet, according to officials of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited.

This new model, illustrated above, combines the smart, youthful dash of the roadster and the snug, all-weather comfort and the exclusiveness of the coupe. The compact landau top can be raised or lowered easily and quickly. A wide substantial rumble seat and cowl lights are included as standard equipment.

The top of tan material, rubber interlined, folds completely when lowered and lies flat back of the seat. Door windows, which fit snugly into the top, are in chromium plated frames and may be raised to act as windshield wings when the top is lowered. When the top is up the rear curtain may be raised to permit conversation with passengers in the rumble seat.

Bedford cord is used for upholstery and interior trimming.

When Misfortune Beckons

The wheels of misfortune sometimes turn against us and we meet with reverses. At these times everything goes wrong. One affliction after another and we are down and out. Probably sickness is the cause. At any rate dark clouds obscure the horizon of the future.

However, no matter how dark the days are, ourselves and our families need clothing and food to keep body and soul together. Who comes to your aid in these dismal periods and supplies your wants until success again shines? The mercants in the towns out side Flesherton know little about your circumstances and care less, although it may have been him who received your support a few months ago. He will not come to your assistance now and tide you over the rough waters of misfortune.No, it is the merchants in your own town who will come to your aid..

"Why certainly Fred, you can have whatever you want until this trouble is over. You've had a tough break, Old Man, and don't be afraid to come here and get what you want."

Charity? No! Just the storekeeper's community spirit asserting itself. He knows that you have always lived in the community and that your honesty is established. Mingled with his commnity spirit is a certain amount of pride in brotherly love. He knows you better than you know him.

Do you wait for misfortune to find out how much confidence your merchant has in you. Do it now.Give him your trade and you will both benefit thereby.
