MEASLES

Measles is one of the most common and dangerous diseases of childhood. It is difficult to understand why so many parents look upon measles as a trivial disease, as one which is not to be compared with Diphtheria or scarlet fever. It is thought so little of that some parents, regarding it as something inevitable that must occur sooner or later, do not hesitate to expose their child so that he may have the disease and get it over with.

Measles never dies out altogther; there are always a few cases, and usually, every two years, there is a real epidemic. Measles causes more deaths than scarlet fever, and in epidmic years, its death rate is often greater than that of diphtheria.

One reason which may account for the feeling that measles is not particularly serious is that the deaths of a large number of children after an attack of measles are shown to have been directly caused by bronchial-pneumonia.

Parents think their child was a victim of pneumonia. This is true, of course, but the pneumonia would not have occurred had it not been for the measles. The real cause of the child's death is measles, and this should be clearly understood.

In the years which see a measles epidemic, there is also noted a considerable increase in the number of deaths in children under five years of age from pneumonia.

These facts should be sufficient to persuade parents that measles is a serious disease, and that they should take every precaution to protect their children from its serious and frequently fatal results.

Measles is infectious from the time the first symptom shows itself. It starts with what is apparently a cold in the head, and the rash does not appear for some days. During the days before the appearance of the rash, the disease is spread by the secretions from the mouth and nose. This is one of the reasons for keeping children who suffer from colds away from other children. Colds are bad enough in themselves, but what appears to be a cold may often be a still more serious condition.

The serious results of measles would be prevented in many cases if proper care were given. Bed is the place for a child who is developing measles, and there he must stay until he has recovered. no matter how mild the attack may appear to be.

Fortunately we have learned something about preventing measles in those exposed to it. Blood serum from a convalescent measles case can be used by the physician to prevent an attack or to lessen its severity if it occurs.

Substantial Drop In Price of Electricity

Notification of another splendid reduction in the price of hydro in Flesherton was received by Mr. C. N. Richardsoon, Secretary of the local hydro commission. The new rates to go into effect with the August billing announce a reduction in the flat rate to domestic users of electricity of twenty-five cents, making the minimum bill $1.00 in place of $1.25 as heretofore. There will be quite a number in town who will benefit by the new rates. The consumption charge is 3.5 cents per k.w hour for the first 55 k.w. hours per month and an additional consumption charge of 1.5 cents. The commercial rates remain the same as before, and. no doubt, thse will receive attention in the next readjustment of rates. One important item in the new prices is the reduction in the price for the power the town pays of $2 per horse power, the new payment will be $43 per h.p.

It is very gratifying to know that Fleshertono hydro is paying its way and that a surplus on the right side of the ledger is in prospect. The whole trouble with the hydro in the past was based on the low estimated cost of the power when the Hydro Commission released their first rates.

SUMMER FALLOWING PAYS

R. H. Clemons, agricultural representative in North Wellington, estimates that West Luther Township alone will have about 4,000 acres of summer fallow. "Nothing has improved our crop yield so much and reduced our weeds more than July plowing," he declares. "Some have found, however, that when a great deal of work is put on a clay field, it runs badly in the spring and becomes wet and soggy, remaining so until it becomes hard on top and produces a later crop than one would expect. This may be overcome to a great extent by duck-footing in the fall with a cultivator and some farmers are planning on ridging with a plow. Ridging summer fallows with a plow is highly recommended in clay areas.

REDUCTION IN ALSIKE

A considerable reduction in the seed crop of alsike and red clover is officially forecast for 1930. Ontario is expected to produce not more than 70,000 bushels of alsike or about one-third of the 1929 production. An increased acreage of alfalfa is being held for seed in Ontario. There was practically no carry-over of alfalfa seed and owing to the extent to which this year's crop was winter killed it is expected there will be a good demand for alfalfa seed during the coming season.
