It is easy to complain but who can utter a complaint.

Short tragedy on the highway—A match, a cigar, an auto steering wheel, an accident and death.

The man who does not take himself too seriously usually has plenty of fun watching those who do.

They tell us the radio is still in its infancy. One shudders to think of the noise it will make when it gets to be a big boy!

These are the days when the average municipal councillor begins to compose his eltection address. The contest will soon be on.

* * *

If every citizen of town would do something to beautify his or her property the effect upon the looks of the community would be remarkable.

In communities where trade appears dull wise merchants do well to bear in mind that business can best be improved by wise expenditure. The chap who put his talent in a napkin and hid it in the ground was deemed the unwise one. The same fellow was voted the one who kept the specie in circulation.

ENGAGEMENT

Rev. Harold E. and Mrs. Wellwood announce the engagement of their only daughter, Evelyn Maude, to Mr. William Alexander Campbell, son of Mrs. Campbell, Toronto, and the late N. W. Campbell, I.P.S., of Durham, Ont, the marriage to take place quietly in October.

Hearse Had Close Call

While Mr. "Dick" Schuett was returning on Wednesday night from Waterloo, where he had conveyed the remains of an aged lady who had passed away at the home of her daughter here, he was horrified on approaching Fulton's corners, near Harriston, to discover on the horizon a pair of runaway Clydes breezing down the highway towards him with the front end of a wagon and looking like a real danger signal.

Although used to sad sights this was enough to bring tears to the eyes of any undertaker, for with his fine motor hearse not overly insured he got over on the pavement as far as he could and in a spirit of depression awaited for the inevitable to happen. As the snorting steeds charged towards him he closed his eyes not knowing whether he would open them in this or another world. It was a thrilling moment in his career, from which he emerged happy with his plug hat still resting on his dome and thoroughly undisturbed by the expected crash.

The steeds knew their stuff and, althouogh they almost tickled his hubs with their freight, they brushed by and left him to, it is hoped, a happier fate in the sweet subsequently.

Further down the road he discovered the cause of all the excitement. A fine big sedan with a boat on a trailer was capsized in the ditch, while a farmer with his head cut was also down in the gully with the other end of the wagon. The connection was apparent, the wagon didn't have any lights on and the car had crashed into the rear of it, ditching both outfits and causing the runaway that threw the big scare into Dick. But "Richard is himself again," while the others, who were all badly mussed up, will likely air their troubles in court.—Walkerton Herald-Times.

A special prepared program was followed Miss Emily Acheson gave a descriptive story about the illustration on the cover of the program, while the pastor, Rev. Scott, also delivered an address. An interesting event during the service was the baptizing of the infant sons of Mr. and Mrs. Wes. Armstrong and Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Thurston.

Get In and Swim

We have all heard that homely expression "fish, cut bait or go ashore," as applied to the man who stands on the sidelines in the game of life always telling others how it should be done, bewailing the stupidity of his fellowmen, but never getting there in doing anything himself. Every office has one until the boss gets tired and chucks him out. Every community has its share of them. They are the men who complain about everything from the policy of the national administration to the methods of the local dog-catcher—and who then forget to go to the polls on election day. Our point is that the man who lives in a community and holds himself aloof from its activities is not a good citizen; moreover, he is not going to be a happy man because he is dodging life as well as his responsibilities. Get in the swim! You may never be a leader. No matter; you are in the game, meeting the life Providence has put you in. No man can be happy if he is always running away from life. What can you do to enliven community activities? The answer is to start somewhere, and if you show a willingness to work you will soon be swamped with your community activities. Work where you can work. It isn't all political or social. Every sincere effort at community betterment on your part makes you just that much bigger. Don't boast a good community and then forget about it. Don't let "George do it." It's up to you to "get in and swim."
