The growing fame of the poem of S. T. Coleridge, is, we doubt, to his immortal poem of "The Ancient Mariner." Of this great work it may be truly said, that it is "of imagination all compact." Every line, almost every word, is suggestive of the grandest or most beautiful imagery. To this reason it has been called "the most wonderful of all examples of true picture writing." It is consequently one of the finest of all English poems, for illustration by the imaginative painter. In the present unapproachable edition, it will be seen that a genius kindred to that of Coleridge himself has given form and reality to the poet's visions. The volume will be received as a priceless gem by the lovers of the Phrenzied bard.

This exquisite Christian idyl, by the Rev Legh Richmond, may be regarded as upon the whole, the most charming, instructive, and popular work of its kind ever written. The gentle daughter of an humble cottager has become the religious teacher of millions. Her memory is embalmed in hearts, with the tender and pure reverence due to such a saint. Mr. Richmond's beautiful and touching memoir of her is, by the common consent of critics, reckoned among the classics of our language. The religious world will be gratified that such a production has been brought out with appropriateness of typography and artistic illustrations. The book printed on fine vellum paper, of a cream tint, with engravings after Birket Foster and others, must become the religious souvenir of the season.
