"Watchman, What of the night?"

At time of writing it would seem that the Ottawa conference would not accomplish much in the way of relieving the current depression. There are many wiseacres that will say, "I told you so." As a matter of fact few people had the temerity to express enthusiastic optimism as to the practical advantages to be secured through the costly machinery operated at Ottawa during the past month. And fewer still had any idea that the depression would be lifted by any such conference. Most people believe implicitly that the depression will never be removed until our legislators withdraw many of the handicaps which they have placed upon trade by the imposition of taxes on everything that enters into manufacturing and living. Not only this, but indirect taxation takes an enormous toll from our living expenses. The governments are issuing loan after loan, and then government debentures are being snapped up by wealth, while the poor man is being mulct to pay the interest on these loans. The workman pays it through his foods and wearing apparel, the poor man through direct taxes as well as indirect. Where is all this leading us? It just means that the poor man will become poorer and the rich will wax fat on the spoils from poverty. We fear to look forward to the passing of the next 50 years. What will they bring forth?

A MUSICAL TREAT

The people of Eugenia and surrounding country were given a splendid treat on Sunday afternoon last, when the Chesley Band presented a fine program of sacred and secular music before a large crowd at the pavillion in the park. The band consists of some forty members, all excellent musicians and the numbers given by the troimbone and trumpet sections were worthy of note as were the solos given by Mr. Macesory, accompanied by trumpets, claironets and tenors, and especially fine were the solos, "My neighbor who lives next door to me" and "Beautiful Isle of somewhere," a request number. The male chorus gives but a slight conception of what this fine band is capable, both in song and accompaninent. The program throughout was highly appreciated. The band was very generous with their music, both at the park and after lunch on Mr. Munshaw's lawn. We feel assured the band will have a big reception when they come again on Sunday afternoon, August 28th.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The circulars sent out by the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests, on the Back-to-the-Land Movement receives scant attention by the various rural and urban councils who have received them. It appears as though they have no interest in the movement.

This just wasn't Canada's year at the Olympic games just concluded in California. While the athletes did exceedingly well in the various contests the extra stamina for a victory couldn't be found.

The diamond jubilee of Inistioge United church will be celebrated on Sunday next, August 21. An interesting sketch of the work of this church since its foundation in 1848 appears elsewhere in this issue, written by "A Lifelong Member". These old records and the names of those who took part in the church's growth and good works are worthy of being engrossed on the scroll of fame. Are we to-day worthy followers of those good old men and women who have passed before us, like stately "ships that pass in the night?"

Over in the U. S. A. the eighteenth amendment is being made a football in the coming presidential election and the "great experiment" will shortly come to an end, according to present indications. The candidates are agreed that some change in the prohibition law will have to be made. Mr. Hoover, who has always been favorable to the law has made it clear that he is in favor of leaving the question to be settled by the individual states. When the smoke of the game has cleared away it may be that the last echo of the eighteenth amendment will have been heard. Will there arise anything better to replace it? We fear not.

What a joke some of our legislators are making of the population questions in Canada! Just a few years ago the Dominion government was moving heaven and earth to persuade immigrants to come to Canada, and were subsidizing steamship lines and railways for bringing them to this land of promise where all could become rich! To-day these same jokers are trying to move heaven and earth to get rid of a lot of those who listened to their syren call in past years. They are singling out those who have not become naturalized and those who have been receiving civic aid, for deportation. This will give the railways and steamships a little more business and Canada will pay the shot both coming and going. There is a cynical note in this paragraph, but do you not think it justified?

Had Wonderful Time

Dunkirk, N.Y., Aug. 9, 1932.

To the Editor of The Advance:

Dear Sir :- Will you kindly allow me space to voice to the committee the thanks of one humble guest at the recent re-union? There must have been many, who, like the writer, will look back to that event as one of the happiest in their experience.

Nor was it the program, splendid though it was, that accounted for our keen enjoyment of the re-union event. What we largely saw that day were once-familiar faces, and the music we heard were the voices of friends of the old days, "When I was the littlest bit of a boy and you were a boy with me."

The writer brazenly confesses to a special reason for remembering the occasion. It was nothing less than a woman's kiss—"given for the sake of the dear old days." The fact that the donor's hair was all silver now does not make the chaste salute less sweet in remembrance.

For many of us it was naturally the opportunity of again greeting old school chums that made the re-union the happy event it proved. It speaks volumes that the writer was able to joyfully greet even Frank Irwin, doubly-steeped in original sin though Frank undoubtedly used to be. Possibly it was reverence for the memory of "the old master" that enabled me to overlook his son's former shortcomings.

How kindly time is in one respect—for as I look back through the haze of the years at the faces of those old schoolmates, I see among them now no cheats or bullies or "tattle-tales"—only an altogether lovely part of the old school days, when we and the sunshine and the big wonderful world were all young together.

Come to think of it, friend editor, what a host of boys and girls must have passed out from that old school-house since its erection nearly half a century ago!

Seemingly in every picture that recurs to me of the old home town there is in the forefront Bill Crossley's horse-drawn bus. Behind the back seat is a little shoe-trunk, and it belongs to a boy or girl being conveyed to the station for the inevitable journey out into the big beckoning world Always the picture is the same—the going away.

Maybe Flesherton cannot be credited with giving to the world much in the way of manufactured products, but she has enriched it with something infinitely more precious; she has given lavishly of her virile young blood for upbuilding of town and city—not only in Canada, but in these United States as well.

Flesherton is fortunate in that among her old boys and girls are a number to-day whose energy and loyalty make it possible for the old place to welcome back, each year, a few, at least, of those sons and daughters.

The writer wishes for the re-union committee at least a tithe of the pleasure they make possible for others.

Thanking you, friend editor, for this opportunity to "come back" to the good old Advance. I am

Yours sincerely,
WES. SMITH.

ROUGH ON GIRL SMOKERS

Last week I saw a little Ford roadster drive up to the ball game crammed with four young men and two girls, all packed in like sardines. Three of the men get out and went over and sat on the benches. Then the girls sat back and lighted cigarettes as though it was the chic thing to do. A cigarette smoking girl is my pet aversion and I'd have liked nothing better than to have taken them one by one across my knee and tanned the spots they sit down on, says editor Duncan of the Wiarton Canadian Echo.

FOOD COMBINATIONS

A considerable amount of interest is evidenced at the present time in certain ideas regarding food combinations We have come to this conclusion because of the numerous questions which are asked as to whether such food combinations as vegetables and fruits, starches and fruit or milk and fruits should be used at the same meal.

The idea that a mixture or combination of certain foods is harmful is one that is widely held. It is not limited to any particular foods, but to all sorts of food in different combinations. There is no scientific basis or dietetic reason for these ideas. The person who says that milk should not be used with acid fruit, because of the acid, ignores the fact that when food reaches the stomach it meets the digestive juices of the stomach, which are acid.

The person who complains that his stomach is acid or sour does not realize that if it were not, it could not digest food, in which case, there would be something to worry about. A large percentage of our foods contain protein, fat and carbohydrates, the proportions varying in the different foods. Whether you eat them all in one food or in several foods, makes no difference from the point of view of their digestion. As a matter of fact, it is desirable to use a wide variety of foods in order to make sure that the body receives a sufficiency of all the elements required to maintain it in a condition of good health. What we need to guard against is not food combinations, but rather omitting from the diet milk, fresh fruits and green vegetables.

The idea of food combinations causing harm is due, in part, to our own indulgences. Someone gorges himself on strawberries and cream with the result that he is upset. Instead of blaming himself for over-eating, he is sure that it was the combination of the strawberries with the cream that was responsible.

It is a human treat to blame anything or anybody, rather than ourselves. How often is the ill effect of some failure on our part to be moderate in eating or drinking blamed on something we ate, and, as a matter of convenience, we usually select the last food used, to attach the blame to. We are often so insistent on this that we will continue to protest that this or that food disagrees with us and refuse to use it again.

Use a wide variety of food. Chew food well, so that it will be broken up into small pieces to which the digestive juices can readily gain access. Be moderate in the use of all foods and avoid indulgences in any one food. Continue your food combinations with the knowledge that there ls no harm in such combinations.
