After the usual opening exercises the roll was called and responded to by the members with "What grandmother used to make." Mrs. Knox gave an interesting reading, "My Grandmother's Chair," while Mrs. Will Gibson gave a poem "The Old Roller Towel." Mrs. Gibson then invited the November meeting at her home. Roll call will be answered with "The moral of thanksgiving." The meeting closed with a duet by Mrs. Earl McLeod and Mrs. McWilliams.

The church held its annual anniversary services on Sunday, October 30th, and special decorations of cut flowers and plants brightened the auditorium. Rev. McPherson of McIntyre had charge of both services, while his work was taken by the pastor, Rev. Scott. Mr. McPherson, who is a wonderful speaker, gave two excellent sermons filled with the gospel truth, which were listened to with rapt attention. At the afternoon service Masters LaVerne, Milford and Sherman Piper with their violins, accompanied by the organist, Miss M. Cook, played for the hymns and assisted the choir, also rendering special music during the offering. At the evening service the Flesherton choir, accompanied by their organist, Mrs. Blackburn, had full charge and rendered several selections, which were much appreciated by the congregation. The church was filled for both services, despite the very disagreeable weather.

HEALTH

YOUTH

The period of transition from childhood to adult life presents certain problems. It is often pointed out how diferent is the youth of to-day from the youth of yesterday. Certainly he is differene, but it is not because the youth himself is different, but that he lives under conditions which have changed greatly during te past twenty years.

Home life is changed. The motor car is a factor which has altered life in many ways. Recreation is found outside the home. There are the movies — to mention but one thing which has had a great influence in changing the habits of life.

It is quite natural for youth to desire independence and to be irritated by the authority of parents and adults. Youth is restless and impatient with his elders. who are so sure that he he should be guided by their experience "for his own good."

It is difficult for the average parent to believe or to practise the belief that considerable freedom in development secures the independence so necessary for success in life. The aim of parents should be to guide without curbing, to direct and not to attempt to control by authority.

Youth is not free from physical health hazards. Amongst the defects which develop during adolescence are those of vision. A periodic checking-up of sight and hearing is most desirable, as good vision and hearing are assets required in most occupations.

The outstanding physical menace of youth is fatigue. Added to the pressurt of school work or of the early years of employment is the new social life. It is most desirable that every person should have a social life, but it is equally true that sufficient rest and sleep are required. During this period, tuberculosis is not uncommon, and its development seems to be associated with the lowered physical condition due to fatigue from too many social activities which, carried into the early morning hours, mean loss of sleep.

The best preparation for youth is a healthy childhood. The practice of a periodic check-up of the physical condition should be continued, with special attention to eyes, ears and teeth. The youth below par should not be allowed to go on without finding the cause of his condition.

Parents should be sympathetic with youth and try to realize that his impatience, resentment and what may appear to them rudeness are the natural, crude expression of his desire for independence which comes with manhood.

The ratepayers of Mildmay village, by a majority of 65, carried a by-law to authorize the municipal council to raise $13,600 to purchase from the Ontario Hydro Commission the electrical distributing plant in that village.
