did not speak. She had fainted, I carried her tenderly to the house, and just on the steps we met two of the skating party—O'Neill and Miss Lomax—returning alone from their pleasure.

'What has happened?' cried Harry, on seeing imperfectly by the faint light that I carried something. 'What is it, old fellow? Any one been stealing sheep.'

I brushed past him into the lighted hall, the others crowded after me; he was at their head.

'Your cousin has fainted,' I said then, shortly enough; she heard that unearthly cry just now, which is supposed to be the Banshee—some practical joke of course. Did you hear nothing? Did you meet no one?'

'What nonsense!' he muttered; but a sudden and rapid exchange of glances passed between him and Miss Lomax; and I at once remembered having heard her boast that she could imitate perfectly any voice, or cry, or call, which she had herself either heard, or heard imitated by another. Was there, then, any connection beween her and the Banshee's cry?

Twelfth-day passed, and then, with the exception of Mrs. and Miss Lomax the guests left the Manor; they lingered on, until I lost all patience, of course, hurt no one but myself. I was provoked, too, that no one would sift to the bottom the mystery of the cry which had so terrified poor, gentle, timid little Norah. Lady Mary pooh-poohed the whole thing as if it were fancy on her niece's part. I could not make myself officious in the matter; and presently the subject was forgotten except by me, and, I am sure, by Norah also; but I never spoke it to her.

Before I, too, left the Manor after my long Christmas visit, for my lodgings in the village, I had another mysterious circumstance to think about. I must, before I briefly relate this new mystery, describe the position of the bed-rooms in the Manor-house. They were many in number and they opened upon one side of a very long gallery; on the other side there was a balustrade, over which you could look down into the handsome hall below. O'Neill had a suite of rooms upon the ground floor; my room was at the end of the gallery, and my door would face any one walking along the gallery from the staircase. Having been over the house a hundred times, I knew that the door next to mine led into a small boudoir or dressing-room, out of which a bedroom opened, which bedroom had also a second door opening the gallery; and I knew that boudoir and bedroom had been appropriated to Miss Lomax by Lady Mary's order.

Upon the last night of my visit, not feeling inclined to sleep, I went down stairs again to read in the library, when the rest of our party had all, as I believed, gone to their rooms for the night. It was one o'clock, when I at length began to feel sleepy; so I then went softly up stairs. Upon reaching the gallery, however, all desire for sleep vanished, for—I was now facing the door of my own room, remember—to my utter amazement, I saw O'Neill emerge from the door of the boudoir. He was careful to close it noiselessly after him; he was in his dressing gown, and his shoeless feet made not the faintest sound upon the carpet. I confess the sudden surprise, and the suspicion which just then swept through my mind, made me almost giddy. He must have seen me almost as soon as I saw him, for I carried a light, and so did he.

He came on to me smiling.

'Where in the world have you been, Hugh? he said, without a shade of embarrassment. 'I have just been to your room to look for you, What's the matter? you look quite pale.'

'To look for me? I said, bewildered, and wondering in my own mind if my sleepy eyes had deceived me. 'To look for me? You did not come out of my room, surely? It was the other door; Miss—'

Good heavens, D'Alton are you mad or asleep?' he cried in an angry whisper, and seizing me by the shoulder. 'Take care how you mention a lady's name in that manner. I was in your room—yours, and no other. Good-night; you must be more than half asleep to make such a blunder.' And he passed on, with a glance which seemed to me to say, 'Take care how you contradict me.'

I went to my room, anxious to believe myself under a delusion; but there I found nothing to tell me if what Harry had said was true: Had I gone to the boudoir, I wondered, should I have found any trace of his presence? I went out into the gallery again, just as if by looking about me there I should be able to satisfy myself. Of course I found nothing, except a withered rose, which had been dropped at the dressing-room door. How came the flower there? I do not know to this hour. Harry had had on his dressing-gown a garment which gentlemen do not usually decorate with flowers. I went to bed, and gave the matter up as one of the thousand unrevealed mysteries which daily occur in our lives.

A few months, or even weeks, since, her pallid countenance was the very type of ruddy health—the delight of the school and the pride of the household. She was always welcome wherever duty or pleasure led her. Diligent, punctual and exemplary in the class-room, obedient and loving at home, she won the hearts of all. But alas! those glowing cheeks and lips are now blanched by consumption. The voice once so enchanting in laugh and song is feeble, husky and broken by a hollow cough. Let us approach her couch and gently take her bloodless hand in our own. Do not shudder because of its feeble, passionless grasp. The hand once so warm and plump shows its bony outlines, while the cords and tortuous veins are plainly mapped upon its surface. The pulse that bounded with repletion, imparting beauty, vivacity, health and strength to the system, is delicate to the touch. The enervated heart feebly propels the thin, scanty blood. Must we lose her while yet so young and so fair? No. There is relief. But something more is required than the observance of hygienic rules, for enfeebled nature calls for aid and she must have it. Administer this pleasant medicine. It is invigorating. It allays the irritable cough, improves the appetite and digestion, and sends a healthy tingle through her whole being. The blood is enriched, nervous power increased, and the heart bounds with a new impulse. Her face brightens—the blood is returning, her voice is clearer, and her requests are no longer delivered in that peevish, fretful tone so deadening to sympathy. Her step is still faltering, but strength is rapidly returning. Let us take her out in the warm, life-giving, sunshine. In a few weeks she will go without aid and be able to join her companions in their pleasant pastimes and feel her whole being "warmed and expanded into perfect life." The change is so great that we think she is sweeter and nobler than ever before. And the medicine which has wrought this transformation we look upon as a blessing to humanity, for there are other loved ones to be rescued from the grasp of the insidious destroyer. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has raised her. It will raise others.

The Sermon Trade.

A friend has sent us a copy of a well written (anonymous) circular addressed to him by a person singing himself "Clericus" which shows that the practice of supplying sermons to clergymen who are too idle or too ignorant to write them for themselves has become quite a profession. Of course there must be a large demand for such things, or it would not answer to fish for customers in the systematic way in which this man in a mask goes to work. The sermons are described as "of a sound Church tone, plain, practical, and earnest, and adapted to the wants of the times." There are said to have "received very high commendation," which commendation we trust the pseudo-preachers did not put into their pockets. They should occupy "from fifteen to twenty minutes in the delivery," are charged from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. each, and are sent out "in quarterly packets in advance." They are "lithographed in a very legible hand, and forwarded in linen envelopes so as to pass the post safely. It is of course conceivable that when the shepherds of adjacent flocks are supplied with the same "manuscripts," very unpleasant results might occur, and in order to allay anxiety on this score subscribers are assured that "all possible care will be taken to prevent two copies of any sermon clashing with each other." Indeed "only one copy of each will be sent to each diocese." Very good, but if subscribers change dioceses what is to be done then? "Clericus," however, seems to be prepared for all exigencies and emergencies, for if you wish for "exclusive" sermons, or "sermons for particular occasions," you may have them on payment of an extra fee. To "avoid misapprehension," "Clericus" does not advertise. But he happens to have on hand just "one complete set of sermons for a year, which he is able to offer at a reduced rate." No doubt this solitary set is capable of indefinite multiplication, like the most precious of Popish "relics." Altogether this correspondence reveals a miserable and disgraceful state of things; yet, as the sermons are "of a Church tone" we may conclude that the dealers find their customers chiefly, if not entirely, among the ranks of the self-styled "Church party." There is some consolation in this reflection, as also in the thought that bad as the sermons of "Clericus" may be, those of his customers would probably be worse if they were home-made.—The Rock.

The Cultivation of the Memory.

Some time ago, in starting a class in Latin, I found pupils who had been taught to desire knowledge and seek for it, to reason in a degree consistent with some ease, but who seemed to lack the ability to acquire readily and recall accurately.

Only exercise develops strength. The hand unused loses its cunning; the foot which has not walked for some time refuses to bear the weight of the body. Symmetry of the body is found when every member has its proper development; symmetry of mind, when each faculty, through training, has its proportionate growth.

One of the tendencies of the age undoubtedly is to underrate or neglect the memory. The cry is that the children must be taught to observe. Well and good; but is it not desirable that observations should be remembered if the knowledge gained through the perception is to be made available?

Again we hear that pupils must learn to reason for themselves. That, too, is well. We would not underrate the reason, though we might question its attaining any great strength in the children; but is one member to be stunted that another might grow? On all sides there is an outcry against "Cram", the word "parrot" slips of our tongues so easily: it is such a common thing to say in a contemptuous way, 'She does not reason, she only memorizes;' because it is so easy to despise what we do not possess, that we as teachers, will do well to examine our footing and see where we stand in regard to the importance of cultivating the memory, and the best manner of training.—Ohio Educational Monthly.

A CARD.

To all who are suffering from the errors and indiscretions of youth, nervous weakness, early decay, loss of manhood, &c., I will send a recipe that will cure you, FREE OF CHARGE. This great remedy was discovered by a missionary in South America. Send a self-addressed envelope to the REV. JOSEPH T. INMAN, Station D, Bible House, New York City.

Extracts from a letter from C. H. S. Cronkhite, Esq.:

Canterbury Station, York Co., N.B., October, 10th, 1876.

Mr J. H. Robinson.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of enquiry, I would say that your Phosphorized Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Lacto-phosphate of Lime is the best preparation of the kind I have ever seen or taken.

I was ordered by my physician to take it, and commenced about the last of August, and since that time I have felt like a different man, and also look differently, and all for the better, as the doctor can testify.

I was unable, in the summer, to walk any distance without much fatigue. I can now take my gun and travel all day, and feel first-rate at night, and eat as much as any lumberman. Have not bled any since I took your preparation, and can now inflate my lungs without feeling any soreness, and I think I can inflate them up to the full measurement same as before I was sick; have also gained in flesh; my weight in the summer was 173 lbs., and now it is nearly 190 lbs., which is pretty well up to my former weight)

The foregoing is a correct statement which I am prepared to swear to, and I hereby authorize you to give it publicity in my name.

I am, dear sir, yours truly,
(Signed,) C. H. S. CHRONKHITE.

We, the undersigned, hereby consent to have our names published as witnesses to the effects of Robinson's Phosphorized Emulsion on the person of Mr Cronkhite, and do assert that the foregoing statement is correct in every particular.

ALEXANDER BENNETT, J.P.,
(Signed.) WILLIAM MAIN.
REV. THOS. HARTIN.

Robinson's Phosphorized Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Lacto-phosphate of Lime is prepared only by J. H. Robinson, Chemist, St. John's, N.B., and for sale by druggists and general dealers. Price $1.00 per bottle; six bottles for $5.00.

☞ When the appetite fails, and head aches, with constipation of the bowels, the liver is out of order, and no medicine gives such prompt and permanent relief as a few doses of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets.
