The Late John Craig

Thornbury's oldest citizen, John Craig, passed away on Saturday at his home on Arthur street, Thornbury. He has been a resident of Thornbury for over fifty years.

He was born in Hogg's Hollow, Yonge street, when Toronto was Muddy York, on May 25th, 1836 and was in his 97th year. Only son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Craig, who had come from Ireland, he moved to Kimberley when fifteen years of age and owned and operated the first threshing machine in Euphrasia township in partnership with the late John Lougheed.

He was for many years a member of the Orange Order and at the time of his death was a member of Lucas Lodge, L.O.L. 767, Thornbury. He was also a member of the Royal Scarlet Chapter, Collingwood township.

Moving to Thornbury over fifty years ago he spent most of that time working at his trade as stone-mason and at the age of 82 years completed his last contract.

He leaves to mourn his loss four children, one son, Edward, of Collingwood, and three daughters, Mrs. Wilson, Thornbury; Mrs. Hudson and Mrs. Pat Quigley of Toronto. His wife, formerly Miss Catherine Armstrong, of Euphrasia, predeceased him 37 years ago. Three sisters also predeceased him.

The funeral will be held on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock to Thornbury Cemetery. The Orange Order will attend in a body.

Do Not Gamble

The farmer who sows cheap or uncleaned seed of doubtful quality is gambling with the odds 10 to 1 against him. In this year of low prices, the differenc between the cheapest and the best seed is merely a few cents per bushel. The result of using poor seed, however, may mean a reduction of 20 to 50 per cent in yield.

Insurance Shows Extent of Poverty

The budget debate has at last finished. The vote on the main motion, amendment and sub-amendment taking place early in the week. Party and group lines were maintained in the vote. Through an error my name was omitted in the Canadian Press dispatches, but I was present and voted three times; in favor of the sub-amendment, against the amendment and against the main motion. The voting did not begin until almost 11 o'clock and continued until nearly midnight. The Canadian Parliament has the most cumbersome way of voting. The British system with the "yeas" and "nays" filing into the voting lobbies, is much quicker. Some countries vote by the member pressing an electric button on his desk, which registers in a counting room and is recorded by the Clerk. Here, every member sitting on his right, in the case of the opposition, and on his left on the government side of the House, is called by the Deputy-Clerk. The name is repeated in a tone loud enough to be heard over the House by the Clerk, who makes a mark on a paper to indicate whether the member is voting for or against and at the conclusion of the voting the Clerk totals the columns, rises from his place, bows to the Speaker and announces the vote.

You will no doubt have noticed that the Senate passed a Sweepstakes Bill, which would allow the hospitals of each province to conduct a sweepstake. General McRae sponsored the Bill in the Upper House, he who is accredited with having much to do with the Conservative victory of 1930, but in the Lower House it was not a Conservative, but a Liberal, Major Power, otherwise known as "Chubby," who introduced the Bill. His argument was that if people want to gamble, they might as well gamble to some good purpose.

The next hour for private bills enabled Mr. Bury, Conservative, and Mr. Carmichael, Progressive, Saskatchewan, to argue earnestly against the Bill, on moral grounds. Mr. Carmichael moved a six-months hoist, but before the motion could be put, 9 o'clock was reached. The Bill, however, will come up again.

More and more people have come to rely upon insurance—life insurance—as a method of providing for old age, and, to a lesser degree, for care during sickness or accident. Nothing shows more clearly the extent of the poverty and hardship suffered by Canadians than the story of lapsed and surrendered policies in the last three years:

	Lapsed	Surrendered
1932	411,222,211	364,285,951
1930	$404,728,370	$172,328,065
1931	408,714,118	245,995,875
Total ..	$1,224,664,769	$782,599,991

It is estimated by the Bureau of Statistics that the lapsed and surrendered policies approximately two million. Previous to 1930, 5 million Canadians held lfe insurance policies. As it is now, less than one-third of the population are insured and these, they who are the best able to pay, who therefore need insurance the least and who, in all probability are the healthiest since they are the least worried.

There are in all 64 life insurance companies in Canada, of which 28 are Canadian, 16 British and 20 foreign. Ten of the British and eleven of the foreign are not writing any new business, which leaves 43 active companies. Of these 35 are stock companies,ies, having a capitalization of $74-752,000, but 12 of the 21 inactive companies have a capitalization of $116,-408,000. It seems clear that life insurance companies do not need capital stock and to the extent that they have it, are impairing the investment of the policy holders. The total yearly income of all companies is over $400 million and the cost of administration, per year $88,677,000. By insurance the people have placed tremendous power in the hands of a few private individuals.

Those best informed on the subject of insurance state that there is nothing further to be gained from competition and more and more people are coming to believe that under government insurance every person in Canada could be protected against old age, sickness and accident at a mere fraction of the present cost. Under nationalized insurance, the most needy, rather than the least needy would be protected and the government would have a huge pool of money for use at much lower cost than the present interest rates.

Paul Reading, special correspondent of the Southam papers, writing on world currency problems, has many interesting things to say. "The crux of this depression lies in the fact that to-day's prices are too low to provide the means of meeting yesterday's debts. . . . Currency is the measure of both debts and prices and very little more than that. It should be a fairly constant measure of both. Unfortuantely it is a RIGID measure of DEBTS and a RUBBER measure of PRICES.

"In 1929 the street price of wheat, No. 1 Northern, in Edmonton on January 31st was $1.04 a bushel. On the same day this year it was 28c a bushel. A $1,000 mortgage, therefore, was equivalent to 962 bushels of wheat in 1929 and 3,970 bushels in 1933.

"Raw materials, the world over, have fallen more than 50 per cent; wholesale prices 33 1-3 per cent. and retail prices 21 per cent. below the 199 level. The general average of farm commodity prices, for instance, is now 10 per cent. below the levels obtaining immediately before the war, while on the average, prices of those goods that farmers chiefly buy are still 5 or 6 per cent. above pre-war prices. Thus the farmer's purchasing power and debt-paying power have been drastically reduced.

"This gap between prices and debts is the real wound in our economic side. It must and will be closed before health can be restored to us. Prices must be raised or debts reduced—there is no other way.

The reduction of debts might be feasible in an automatic world under a dictator, who could, by a stroke of the pen, reduce everything from war debts to store debts simultaneusly. But in this imperfect world of realities the only ready means of general debt reduction is the slow crumbling process of default and bankruptcy.

"The problem of 1933 is to forestall that process by raising prices. . . . This is the main task of the monetary conference."

Wilkie Is Insane

Melville Wilkie, 24-year-old Owen Sound transport driver, on Wednesday night was commited to an insane asylum for the murder last December of his wife in a gasoline blaze that burned their bedroom and suffocated their baby girl.

Wilkie, accused of setting fire to the home so he might collect an insurance policy he had placed on his wife's life, was convicted of murder, but was declared insane by a jury in the court of Mr. Justice Nicol Jeffrey.

The jury returned their verdict after almost eight hours' consideration, during which they twice returned to the crowded courthouse to receive further instructions from the judge. On their first return, Foreman Stanley McConnell said there was little prospect of agreement, but Mr. Justice Jeffrey further instructed them and ordered them to return. They reappeared to ask how to word their verdict.

During the entire proceedings Wilkie remained quietly uninterested, and received his sentence in the same way. He was led from the court immediately the judge ordered his confinement to the asylum.

On the night of December 5 or early the following morning fire swept suddenly through the bedroom in the Wilkie home at Owen Sound. Mrs. Wilkie suffered fatal burns, dying 17 hours later. The six-months-old daughter of the Wilkies was suffocated in the room.
