GARDENERS' INSECT FRIENDS

All garden insects are not injurious. In fact many of them are beneficial, continually doing good by destroying those species which are harmful. Foremost among the insects that help the gardener are the different kinds of ladybird beetles. Both in their larvae and adult stages, they feed almost exclusively upon plant lice and scale insects. Another kind of beetle, the fiery ground beetle, is a particularly useful insect. This beetle and its voracious grub, which is called the cut worm lion, destroy enormous numbers of cutworms. The beetle is brownish-black, with the wingcases spotted with coppery red—hence its name. The large harpalus beetle, which is very common, destroys cutworms. The different kinds of lacewing, and other two and four winged parasitic flies are also friends of the gardener.
