Not Well Pleased.

William Duff, president of the Frontenac cheese board, is none too well pleased because the members of the board did not put up $50 for the cheese exhibit. He threatens to resign from the presidency. He put up a $20 gold medal and paid a membership fee of $1 besides.

ANOTHER BET BY CROKER.

WAGERS $20,000 TO $50,000 ON BRYAN'S ELECTION.

It Was With the Same Wall Street Firm That He Made His First Bet With the Same Odds—The Tammany Chieftain Seems to Have an Honest Delusion That Bryan Will Win.

Saratoga, Sept. 15.—Richard Croker, Tammany's chieftain, left town by an early train and he hadn't passed Albany before it became known from the highest sources that he had made another bet of $20,000 to $50,000 with a well-known Wall street firm of brokers that Bryan would be elected. This is the second bet of this kind that Mr. Croker has made, and so it must be accepted that he has, all told, wagered $40,000 to $100,000 on Bryan's election. The first bet of $20,000 to $50,000 made by Mr. Croker on Bryan's election was two weeks ago, and was heralded all over the country. That bet and the one made here by him were with the same parties in Wall street. Only those who have talked with Mr. Croker in a personal way can begin to understand his confidence in Bryan's elections. He speaks of it constantly, and a remark said to have been made by him in 1896 is constantly recalled. It was: "Bryan may not be elected this year, but his time will come in 1900."

Beauty and the Bath.

"The complexion is one of the points that are noticed first in a woman's appearance," writes Mrs. Humphry, in The Ladies' Home Journal, telling plain women how they may be pretty. "The bath is a valuable aid to the necessary purity of the skin, but, like all beneficial processes, it is liable to abuse. The hot bath especially is misused to a great extent. A warm bath, as distinct from a hot one, is seldom injurious, but the safest is the tepid or the quite cold one.

"The test is a simple one. If after a cold bath, when the skin is dried, the surface of the body glows with heat and is suffused with a pink tint, all is well, but if this reactionary warmth fails to respond to vigorous rubbing with the towels the bath is injurious. A chill often follows the hot bath, which proves how dangerous it is. If a chill follows the cold bath, it must be abandoned at once and the tepid tried. Much depends upon the circulation, whether it be brisk or sluggish. If the former, the cold bath may almost certainly be ventured upon with uniformity and become a daily delight, but if the circulation be slow and defective a large can of hot water should be added to the cold.

"Only a short time should be allowed to the bath proper, whether hot, warm, tepid or cold, but the drying process should be thorough and vigorous."

The Housewife's Daily Burden.

It is a common remark with hundreds of men that they wonder "what women find to do all day." Sometimes curiosity gets the better of a man and he asks his wife what she has done all day. "Oh, a hundred and one little things," she says. Then he thinks of some momentous scheme over which he had been working all day and makes a mental comparison, in which his wife's work takes second place. He overlooks the fact, however, that a woman's life in the home is made up of "little things," and that these same "little things" are not only necessary but that they are absolutely vital to the even adjustment of the domestic machinery of his home. They are "little" only in a woman's eye; they would instantly assume proportions of magnitude if the man's hands were to try to do them.—Edward Bok in Ladies' Home Journal.

The Trekking Wagon.

The South African wagon is a long, heavy cart mounted on four high wheels, as a rule, with a sort of canvas tent over the back half, leaving the front clear to carry the miscellaneous furniture of its owner, drawn by 16, 18 or 20 oxen, curiously fierce looking, with their immense spread of horn, sometimes as much as eight feet from tip to tip and rarely less than six, but in reality as patient and hardworking beasts as one could wish to find.

Their mode of progression is certainly slow, but there are a strangeness and a fascination about it which may draw men to it almost as the Alps draw their devotees. In front there marches the "voor looper," generally a small boy, leading the two foremost oxen by a rein or rope passed through their nostrils.

The driver walks alongside with the long and terrible whip he uses so unsparingly or else sits on the front of the wagon and gets off occasionally to lash up the whole team with unfailing impartiality. The traveling is all done at night, starting a little before sunset and marching till perhaps 11 or 12 o'clock; then there is a halt till a little before the first signs of dawn, when they go on again till the sun begins to get hot overhead, and then they lie by for the day.

An Explanation.

"John," said the funny man's wife sternly, "did you write this horrid mother-in-law joke in The Weekly Snicker?"

"Yes, my dear," replied John humbly, "but"—

"Well, I think you are just too mean for anything. Hasn't my mother always treated you like her own son?"

"Yes, love, I know she has, "but then"—

"Don't try to excuse yourself. If I had ever supposed you capable of such baseness, I never should have married you. I don't see how you will be able to look her in the face when she comes to visit us next week."

"You don't understand," said John desperately. "She told me that joke herself, and it will tickle her to death to see it in print."—San Francisco Examiner.

Jacob Rominger, a fireman on the tug Siemans, fell into the river at Windsor, Ont., and was drowned. The man was thirty-five years of age, unmarried and belonged to Wiarton.

BEER IN BRAZIL.

The Natives Cool the Beverage by Putting Ice Into the Glass.

New York Press.

Few sights are funnier than to see a Brazilian drinking beer and putting ice in the glass to cool it. In that equatorial country no attempt is made to keep the beer cool before it is drawn. In the wholesaler's house it is cooled before delivery, but if the man who drinks it doesn't like its temperature, in goes a bit of ice, if it is handy. Brazilian beer can be chilled only once, and it is undrinkable over night.

Bahia draws its beer supply from the Rio Janeiro and San Paulos breweries, which make for the most part light beer. A glass of beer is called "choppe," and it sells for 600 reis, or nine cents. Teutonia halle, in Bahia, the only establishment in the town that approaches the dignity of a saloon, sells as many as three and sometimes six kegs of beer a day. A keg once opened has to be sold before the day is over, or else it spoils, for refrigerators are unknown. Most of the lower classes buy cheap wines, and especially the native rum, "cachaca," a glassful of which costs only forty reis. So with them the drinking of beer is a cultivated taste.

At society functions it is the custom to have all kinds of drinks in a room set aside especially for that purpose. Beer in the cask is on tap at the weddings of the 400.

Lipton Will Try Again.

New York Times.

Interviewed the other day at the Royal yacht club in regard to the prospects for international yachting in the immediate future, Sir Thomas Lipton said that all he knew about the matter was his own determination to have another try for the America's cup. He is said to have made the statement that "no challenge has yet been received from America, and consequently a date cannot be fixed," but that could hardly have been said by a man so familiar with the course of formalities leading up to races for the famous vase.

It is easy to believe, however, that when Sir Thomas was asked if he considered American yachtsmen equal to those of Great Britain, he answered with enthusiasm: "I do in every respect. I say without fear that there are no finer yachtsmen in the world than Americans." And to this he made the significent addition that he never had been able to see why American yacht owners so often secured English sailing masters for their boats.

Speaking of the last races, Sir Thomas said: "The best boat won on her merits. I did not spare money on the Shamrock's build, nor in her racing, nor in equipping her with crew or gear. She cost ten times as much as any other yacht that raced for the America's cup, besides what it cost to take her across the Atlantic. I intend calling my new yacht the Shamrock, the same as her predecessor. The challenger will have the advantage of testing her sailing qualities, when built, with the old Shamrock. They will have trial races. I have not changed, nor do I intend to change, the construction of the old boat, so that she may have a fair trial with the new boat exactly as she was when she competed with Columbia."
