PROTON STATION

A spirit of lawlessness takes possession of Canadian youth on Hallowe'en night. We may be thankful it does not come oftener than once a year.

Mr. Hoddinott, B.A., of Emmanuel College was the speaker in the interests of the M. and M. fund in the United church on Sunday night. He gave an instructive talk on the "Home Mission" work of the United church in districts where he has labored.

Mrs. Hugh Copeland is visiting her father, Mr. A. Stewart.

Miss Maude Acheson, teacher at Melancthon Station is ill at her home here this week.

IN MEMORIAM

GORDON — In loving memory of our dear daughters and sisters, Eunice, who passed away November 28 1929 and Enid November 9, 1932.
Their memory is as dear to-day
As in the hour they passed away.
—Sadly missed by their Parents Brother and Sisters.

SHOT DEER

For the last year or longer a young deer has made its home in a large bush on the Lundy, Leggett, McElwain and Hamilton farms in the south end of Adjala township. Mr. Alex. Lundy states that the animal had grown half tame and it was a comparatively easy matter to get close to it. One night just prior to the recent snowstorm it was shot by some lawbreakers, who then skinned the deer, stuffed the hide, head and legs into an old sack and carried the carcase away. The first intimation the neighbors had of what had happened was when some of them discovered the sack, which had been torn open by pigs. There is a good deal of indignation over the shooting and the wish is general in the neighborhood that the lawless hunters may be brought to justice.—Orangeville Banner.

"ROYAL" PROSPECTS GOOD

Advance information from the management of the Royal Winter Fair is to the effect that prospects are brighter for the coming fair than any in its 12-year history. It is expected that there will be a particularly heavy entry of all classes of live stock and farm products. For eight days, November 22 to 30, there will be on display some of the best products of the land. The small breeder or small landowner will be found in competition with the products from large holdings. The boys will have an opportunity to show their beef calves in a wide open competition. Formerly it was necessary to be a member of a calf club in order to show, but this year any boy between 14 and 20 years of age who has a calf sired by a purebred bull born on or after September 1, 1932, which he has fed, cared for and fitted two months prior to fair dates, may enter in competition.

REMOVING HATS AT FUNERAL SERVICES

A frequent cause of death, especially among older people is illness brought on by exposure while attending funerals during raw or cold weather People who follow indoor occupations are apt to catch cold by standing in a cold wind or rain. But the most frequent cause of colds on such occasions is the custom of standing bareheaded during the service. It is a nice custom but one not suited to a climate such as we have in this part of the world. Is there anybody who has not heard of some acquaintance or friend at some time or other, who has lost his life as the result of standing bareheaded at a funeral?

We attended a large funeral a few days ago where an overflow of a hundred people were standing on the verandah to hear the service through the open door. As the service started they bared their heads, and then a quiet voice was heard saying: "It is the wish of the family that nobody take a risk of removing his hat." It was a thoughtful and sensible suggestion. One feels that the spirit of reverence can be preserved just as well without endangering the health of the friends who are present to pay their tribute of respect.—St. Marys Journal-Argus.

Three divorces were granted in Brampton in one day, but they were all Toronto cases. Brampton is a quiet and decent sort of a place, and we cannot understand why Toronto litigants are allowed to muss it up.

HEREDITARILY SPEAKING

Among the many evidences of fatalism that have been handed down through the centuries, none is productive of greater harm than the one which invokes destiny to explain away an acquired disease. The distinctly hereditary diseases are so few in number that they may be counted on the fingers, and these are relatively unimportant when compared to the great army of diseases which kill and blight so many.

It must not be thought, however, that the above statement endeavors to condone or to approve a union of the mentally—or physically unfit, for it is only too well known how tragic the results of such a union generally are from a social as well as an economic point of view.

There is no proof that cancer is hereditary any more than is hardening of the arteries or any of the degenerative changes which are so very often the affliction of the middle-aged and of the old.

Of all the diseases which bear the stigma of being hereditary, none is less deserving of that description than is tuberculosis. There are still many people who hold the belief that tuberculosis develops in an individual because one of his immediate, or removed, or distinctly-connected ancestors died of tuberculosis, whereas, in most instanees, the source of the disease, is an actual case, usually in the immediate family. The chronic, unsuspected case, frequently undiagnosed, is often responsible for transmitting the disease, because such cases are not sick enough to go to bed. He or she may be known to the community as a sufferer from "winter cough" or "a touch of asthma." These people do not know that they have tuberculosis, and so, in their ignorance, they are spreaders of the disease.

Tuberculosis is definitely not an hereditary disease. It is transmitted, in a direct manner, from person to person and through the medium of unpasteurized milk.

To come into the world poorly equipped physically for the battle of life is the unfortunate lot of many. This should give cause for greater precautionary measures against the development of disease, but without destroying the morale of the individual, or, by over-solicitude, create a worse condition than the first.

While tuberculosis is no respector of persons and acknowledges no social boundaries, it nevertheless finds nowhere a more fertile soil than in the individual who is below par physically, and whose energy expenditure is greatly in excess of what reason should dictate.
