WINTER FOOTWEAR.

FAREWELL TO THE COMMON SENSE.

The Winter Shoes and Slippers Will Be Original and Striking.

In some respects the styles which will prevail in this season's footwear are in marked contrast to those of last winter.

The "common sense" last is no longer popular. Indeed, it is barely tolerated by those square-toed people who cannot wear the new shapes, the "Piccadilly" and the "Derby." Both of these lasts have pointed toes, the Piccadilly reaching quite an extreme in that direction.

A NEW BOOTER.

The most fashionable cut is what is called "slipper foxing," where the vamp runs in one continuous piece to the heel. Almost all shoes have pointed tips and a new and pretty style is "the wing tip." The Blucher cut is the most popular for street wear, and, in fact, all laced boots are quite in vogue.

In materials the latest thing for walking boots is calfskin, and a pair of these stout articles, Blucher cut, with tips and heel pieces and extremely heavy soles, challenge all sorts of wear and weather. The trouble is that even calfskin needs good care. It should be blacked every day with the ordinary blacking, a plebeian brush and great industry. Of course a man has the advantage over us in that he can climb into a bootblack's chair and brush up his ideas by reading the morning paper while some one else brushes his boots. But if you do adopt the latest fad of calfskin boots you must make up your mind to labor in their service, or get some one else to labor for you, because if you do not the leather will turn brown and crack.

IN PATENT LEATHER.

Patent leather is more popular than ever. Cloth tops are fashionable, with foxing of patent leather. A new design in the shape known as the "bootee" has rubber gores in the sides, the lacing in front being only in appearance.

For evening wear, the popular materials are suede, satin and bronze kid. Most of the suede slippers are in the shape called the "Duchess." This has a long vamp running up to a point at the ankle. The side pieces come forward and meet under a ribbon bow. The vamps are crossed with Bebe ribbon. The suede and the ribbon must match the costume. Almost all evening shoes are beaded. One exception is the patent leather "Erminie," something like the "Duchess."

BRONZE SHOE.

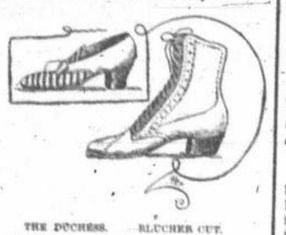
Another leading style is the "double twin strap" slipper, which is made in kid or suede and is beaded on the toe and on the four straps which cross each other in a sort of lattice work on the instep.



THE DUCHESS. —BLUCHER CUT.

The fur-lined "Romeo," of quilted satin is a beautiful and luxurious carriage shoe, while the red morocco of the same shape is an attractive thing for the boudoir. The d'Orsay, a miniature copy of a man's "fore and aft" slipper, is even more popular than the Romeo. For those who do not care to make even brief excursions across the room; the dainty little padded satin toilet slippers, without anything above the sole in the back, are tempting enough with their glittering beads and tiny frills of ribbon.—N. Y. World.

Kate Marsden, the Leper Heroine.

Kate Marsden, who is coming to this country to lecture, with a view to raising means for founding more leper colonies in Siberia, is a woman of most heroic courage and zeal, who has taken upon herself a work which would be loathsome and impossible to any one not inspired with a sublime passion for self-sacrifice. Through 2,000 miles of swampy and unhealthy country in Asiatic Russia, through forests and districts where one false step might mean death, over the snow wastes of Siberia, Miss Marsden has travelled seeking out the wretched lepers, and founding the thirteen leper colonies she has established for the sufferers who previous to her coming were without shelter of any kind.

The Woman "Drummer."

A firm of machinists in Scandinavia employs a young woman agent whose territory covers the whole of Europe. She recently arrived in London direct from Moscow and en route for Melbourne. The woman commercial traveller is frequently met on the Continent, one London firm employing several women as travellers, and many manufacturers having one or more women as agents.

A FANCY SWIMMER.

He Dives With Both His Hands and Legs Securely Tied.

Those who have experienced some difficulty in learning how to swim, chiefly through lack of confidence in the buoyant power of water, will feel somewhat relieved when they look at this picture. It represents Mr. W. Sully, of London. Mr. Sully, it will be seen, attempts the apparently hazardous undertaking of diving with his arms and legs tied. The ordinary swimmer finds it a sufficiently difficult matter to keep himself afloat with the unhampered use of all his limbs. Mr. Sully, on the other hand, not only keeps himself afloat, but dives and performs various evolutions by merely wriggling his body about. These feats are performed nightly, and Mr.

Sully is still enjoying vigorous health. With the free use of his arms and legs he can do such a variety of things that there is not sufficient space to mention them here.

A Reporter's Laughable Mistake.

Of all the recent outbreak of articles about the high church services at St. Martin's nothing has caused more amusement, to the devotees of ritual, who gather around Father Riddell than the innocent mistake of a reporter whose classical education had been neglected. This young man drew a vivid picture of Father Riddell "swinging the thurifer around the altar." Now, what the young man meant was thurible, the metal vase in which the incense is burned. The thurifer is the man who carries the thurible, and, as the thurifer at St. Martin's is a robust youth weighing perhaps 150 or 160 pounds, the idea of Father Riddell swinging him about the altar, with the consequent damage to altar lights and chancel furniture, appeals to the choir boys as something irresistibly comic. St. Martin's is fortunate, by the way, in not having public attention called to its ritualistic services until the parish is in a very flourishing condition financially and on the soft side of the bishop. At the very time Pelham Williams was driven out of St. Stephen's Father Riddell had, begun to "raise," if that is the proper term, the services at this church, and more than a year ago they reached a point which old fashioned low church people would have considered scandalous. Evidently Father Riddell knows how to handle a delicate matter.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Dream Fulfilled.

There have been few physical experiences of more interest and possible value to research than those connected with the sickness and death of the late John C. Bundy, editor of the Religio-philosophical Journal. A very striking one is given in the memorial number of the journal which he has been connected with for many years.

At the time of Mr. Bundy's approach to the other side of life's veil his eldest sister, Mrs. Francis Bundy Phillips, was in Colorado, whither she had gone seeking health and strength. Though aware of her brother's protracted illness, she did not know how very serious that illness was, but on the night he passed away she had two singular physical experiences. All the evening she felt a remarkable sadness and depression of spirits, so much so that because of it she refused to join a party of her friends at the hotel, who asked her to share in some social pastime going on among them. She went to bed at the usual hour, and dreamed that Mr. Bundy had passed away and that she was present at his funeral, many of the particulars of which her dream foretold correctly—for instance, in her dream she heard sung distinctly one of the musical selections rendered by Miss McDonald at the services at St. Charles—viz., "Lead, Kindly Light."

When she rose next morning she glanced at the clock in her room for the time and discovered that it had stopped. She examined it to discover the reason for its stopping, but could find none. This fact and her dream so worried her that, though she had promised and intended to accompany a party into the mountains for a pleasure trip in the morning, she felt so sure that a telegram with bad news was coming for her that she declined going, and remained at the hotel waiting the news, which came before noon. The telegram gave the hour when her brother departed, and the time at which the clock stopped was the same hour, allowing for the difference between Colorado and Chicago time.—Boston Transcript.

Iron Casks.

According to experiments which have been conducted by Herr Arthur Holle, of Munich, with a view to manufacturing iron casks suitable for transport purposes, it is demonstrated that a simple coating of the interior of the barrel with various kinds of lacquer, enameling, and also tinning, zincking, nickeling and coppering are unsuitable. In the end the German technologist found that the lacquered sheet iron was best adapted to the object in view, but he endeavored, at the same time, to secure a fitting insulating coating by means of an intermediate layer. Strong paper, it was shown, became decomposed; the use of thin gauze material was also pronounced to be impracticable. The best intervening agent proved to be silk paper.

The operation of applying the coating was as follows: The interior of the barrel was first lacquered; the tissue paper was then evenly put in position with the aid of some varnish, and finally it was furnished with a finishing coat of lacquer. The covering thus obtained resisted the influence of heat, moisture, and of acids which were much stronger than those contained and developed in beer. It is to be noted that a special kind of lacquer is used, so that the fluid may not savor of the varnish.—London Iron.

Paradise Near the Pole.

Would it surprise you to hear that the Lofoden Islands, off Norway, are on their south side a terrestrial paradise? The gulf stream warms them all the year round and the consumptives of the world enrich them by taking their codliver oil. The codliver oil boss is Peter Muller, who employs 70,000 people in fisheries, factories, bottling, packing and so on. There are pastoral Edens on the ledges of the Lofoden mountains. I never saw more grace in combination with the sort of craggy severity that one meets with on the west coast of Scotland, with this difference, however, that the Hebrides are as though painted in Indian ink, whereas the coloring in summer in the Lofoden scenery is indescribably splendid. I shall not easily forget how all new to it were lifted out of themselves by the sail through Raft sund.—London Truth.

"CIRCUS COMING, MARY."

The Children Need Much Looking After When the Show is in Town.

The head of the family lingered over his coffee. Clearly, something lay heavy on his mind. Now and then he darted a quick look at the partner of his joys and sorrows across the table and coughed lightly, only to turn his gaze again into his cup. At length he spoke.

"Circus coming, Mary."

He sought to create the impression that he was voicing a mental reflection. The demure lady across the table nodded affirmatively.

"It's a good circus, I think."

He was playing with his fork absently. It was several minutes before he had anything further to say.

"I guess," he observed with an air which was only a fair imitation of the off-hand, "that nothing is more instructive than a good circus."

The careful observer might have noticed a shadow settling upon the fine face of the matron. No word fell from her lips, however.

"Especially for children."

He was folding his napkin carefully.

"I suppose," he sighed, simulating regret, "that I'll have to go with our children."

"William!"

The partner of his joys and sorrows threw large quantities of astonishment, chagrin and reproach into the single word.

"After such a strict religious training as you have had!" she exclaimed.

As he rose from the table he sighed in earnest. Standing irresolutely by the window he stared at the landscape, half in sadness, half in shame.

"William."

Her voice was something softer than before.

"William"—

She came and trustingly twined her arms about his neck.

"I think"—

She kissed his forehead fondly.

"It will need both of us to take the children to the circus."

He strained her to his breast and their souls united in a community of purpose.

COOKING A STEAK.

The Proper Way to Serve that Delicious Viand.

Never wash a steak if it can be avoided. This advice does not meet with the approbation of some cooks, but these neat bodies are very careful if the meat is given a drenching to wipe it perfectly dry before cooking. Before you place your steak on the broiler see that your fire is a glowing bed of coals, and have close at hand butter, salt, pepper and a hot platter. Now place the cut on the broiler and drop it upon the coals for two minutes, when it must be turned. In this way you secure the juices, and it is then ready to receive a more moderate treatment. Watch it constantly, and turn so dexterously that it will not smoke or scorch.

Ten minutes is all that is needed for a rare broil. Take a keen blade and cut into the thickest part. If the heart has lost its purple tinge transfer at once to the dish. Sprinkle liberally with bits of butter, salt and pepper. Unless you have a hot water dish do not send the steak in to the table until all the family are seated. Tough steak may be made eatable by laying it on a board and making slight incisions in the meat, when, if it is rubbed with the strained juice of a lemon and placed on ice over night, it will be ready for breakfast.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

What Do You See?

If I were to ask you to shut your eyes and try to fancy that Christmas stood before you, what would you see? Ah! not one, but many. Some of you would see, in your mind's eye, an old man with long, white, frosty beard and kindly face, his brave form draped in a sparkling robe of snow decked with icicles—old Father Christmas from top to toe. Some would see another sort of figure—a round, rolypoly, jolly personage, dressed in furs from crown to sole, laughing in every feature of his plump, ruddy face, all aglow after driving his Dunder and Blixen, and half hidden by his great sleigh-load of toys. Some of you, again, would see nothing but the toys, and your only thought, I shudder to say, would be, "Which of them are for me?" Some of you would see no fanciful personage at all; but glorious winter without, and within doors a bright home, a glowing hearth, and all the family eager to welcome you from school for the happy holiday week. And a great many of you would scarcely close your eyes before the beautiful Christ-child would come and fill your soul with love and joy and gratitude, and your one next thought would be to give happiness to many, to make other hearts as glad as your own on the Perfect Day.—St. Nicholas.

"The Mayor Wants to See Thee."

A young man had been to sea, and on his return was narrating to his uncle an adventure which he had met with on board ship.

"I was one night leaning over the taff rail, looking down into the ocean," said the nephew, who was called William, "when my gold watch fell from my chain and immediately sank out of sight. The ship was going ten knots an hour, but, nothing daunted, I sprang over the rail down, down, and after a long search found the watch, came up, and chased the ship and climbed back to the deck without any one knowing I had been absent."

"William," said his uncle, "I believe thee, but there's many a thousand that would not."

"What!" exclaimed William. "You are politely insinuating I'm a liar!"

"William," said the old man gravely, "thee knows I never call anybody names, but if the mayor of the city were to come and say, 'Josiah, I want thee to find the biggest liar in all Brummagem,' I would come to thee and put my hand on thy shoulder and say to thee, 'William—the mayor wants to see thee.'"—Tit-Bits.

Hoarded Gold Found.

A story is told at Martinsville to the effect that Frederic G. Axt, who died last week, left to his wife, daughter and son $10,000 in gold which he had kept carefully secreted in an old trunk. His son William engaged in business with a leather house in Indianapolis fifteen years ago. His sister married a Mr. Bernhardt and preceded him to that city. The father and mother have lived alone and very economically all that time, as only Germans can. Mr. Axt revealed the hidden treasure to his family a few days before his death, and the trophy was borne off to Indianapolis and deposited in bank. The family told friends that they thought he had a sum of money secreted, but were surprised at the large amount. The money was never given in for taxation, and the county officials are now doing their best to recover on the same.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The Missing Clue.

In the north of London a few weeks ago a crowd might have been seen questioning a ragged urchin who had lost himself in the whirl of the streets. The boy, however, who was about four years old, could give no satisfactory reply.

"Where do you live?" asked a sympathetic bystander.

"Don't know."

"Where do you go to school?"

"Don't go," was the tearful response.

The audience was in despair, until a stout old lady, evidently of his own class, triumphantly solved the mystery by asking:

"Whery do you get your mother's beer?"

"Prince of Wales," was the ready reply, naming a public house a few streets away. The boy was promptly hauled off to that hostelry to be identified.

Cannot Be Dented.

The curative influence of the pine in lung diseases is everywhere admitted, and when combined with other effective pectoral remedies as in Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup the effect is doubly beneficial. No case of cough, cold, asthma, bronchitis or hoarseness can resist the healing powers of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. 25c and 50c at druggists.
