FOR HIS MOTHER'S SAKE.

Unmarried at twenty-two. I was rich, entirely my own mistress, and considered more than pretty; and still, in spite of many excellent opportunities to change my condition, I was rapidly drifting on towards old-maidenhood; no wonder people called me hard to please.

I had admirers and suitors in plenty; where is the heiress who has not? And two men loved me.

I say "two men." There were many who made professions, and of whose sincerity I have no means to judge, but these two I can answer for as for myself, and I know they loved me.

Never were two people more unlike each other, in looks, in taste, disposition, temper, everything. It seemed the strangest thing in the world that both should fancy me.

Even their respective circumstances and positions in life offered a striking contrast. George Redfern was a wealthy and influential banker, forty years of age, grave, quiet, and reserved in manner, and with an indisputable and enviable standing in society—a man against whom no breath of reproach or blame had ever stirred; while Robert Dene—my Robert, whom I loved—was comparatively poor, having only his salary as confidential clerk in the Redfern bank (out of which he supported a widowed mother), and was one of those merry, cheerful, light-hearted fellows who somehow—perhaps from their love of company and pleasure—get the name of being "wild," without deserving it. Certain it is that Robert merited no word of evil, though there was a time when it looked otherwise.

Mrs. Dene had been my dear dead mother's friend. Naturally I often went to visit her. She was a great invalid, and hardly ever went out, except for an occasional quiet drive with her devoted son, who idolised her; so much so that I grew positively jealous.

For Robert and I understood each other, as lovers will. He was very sensitive and high-minded. I thought, at first, that because I was an heiress he would never speak the love I knew he felt, and which I longed to hear; but the welcome declaration came at last.

And I had Mr. Redfern to thank for it. I met him at Mrs. Dene's cottage one evening, when he had stopped to speak to Robert on some business, having chanced to see him in the garden as he was riding past.

I was at the window, leaning out, and he saw me. I knew, afterwards, that that was the reason he astonished Robert by accepting his invitation to come in.

He was a very quiet retiring man, going little into society, and bearing the reputation of a confirmed old bachelor, but after that evening he changed.

I seemed to meet him everywhere. He made the acquaintance of people whom I visited. He took to going to balls, theatres, operas; and when I had met him a good many times, he requested permission to call on me.

Robert heard of it, and grew jealous. One evening he came to me, his dear handsome face looking gloomy and sad enough.

"We have been friends for years," said he, "and I believe you like me well enough to grant me a favor. I love you, Kate. That's no news to you; is it? Well, I never should have told you so—never should have asked you to become my wife, because you are rich and I am poor; but, my girl, I can't stand quietly by and see another take what I'd have died to win; so I want you to tell me truly if you intend to marry Redfern, and if it's 'yes,' I shall go out of the country, and stay out until I can get over it."

Oh, the happy girl I was when I heard him! The precious words I had longed for were spoken at last. He might have seen the joy in my face. I felt my cheeks burn, and my eyes grow bright with happiness; but he kept his face gloomily turned away.

So I stole up to him, half shy, half bold, all joyful, and slipped my hands about his arm.

"And can you 'get over it,' do you think?" I asked demurely.

He looked at me then, and disengaged his arm. He thought I was trifling with his pain, and was vexed at me.

"This is no jest with me, Miss Craven, whatever it may be to you," he said quite sharply: "I did not expect that you would make it one. Yes," very coldly, "I am not a love-sick fool. I do suppose I shall get over it."

I looked at him reproachfully. I felt the tears spring to my eyes at his words and tone.

"You don't love me as I love you, then, Robert," I said softly; "for if you go away and leave me so, I'm afraid I never shall get over it."

"Oh, my darling!"

How quickly his face brightened as he caught my hand!

"You say that, Kate? You mean it? You don't love Redfern—you won't marry him?"

"I love you," I answered, as his dear arms clasped me close; "and you only will I marry."

And so we were engaged. And Robert drove me over to the cottage, there and then, to tell his mother.

"She will be so pleased," he said. "I believe that she suspected my feelings. But I would not confide them to her, lest the fear of disappointment and pain to me should distress her."

How he loved her! A little jealous pang shot through my foolish heart.

"I fear you love her best," I said impulsively.

"My darling," he said half chidingly, "one does not measure or compare such sacred loves; each and both is 'dearest.' But my mother suffers from an affection of the heart. Any anxiety or pain must injure her, and a sudden shock would kill."

And then it was I first understood rightly his devoted care of her, a care in which, from that hour, I shared.

Next day Mr. Redfern proposed to me. My heart, in spite of its own happiness, ached for the bitter pain he showed when I told him I was engaged already.

"I had set my every hope on you—I cannot give you up!" he cried, with an intensity of passion that startled me. "Oh, child, have mercy on me! Think again—give me time. I am richer than you think; if you are ambitious—"

I interrupted him.

"I am not; I have wealth enough, and covet only happiness. I shall marry Robert Dene, the man I love."

His face was white as death.

"You shall not marry him!" he said with a deep and bitter oath. "Never, while I live! I swear it!"

And he rushed out of my presence like a madman, leaving me shocked, frightened, perplexed, and with a strange sad cloud upon my happiness.

I said nothing about it to Robert, however. His relations with his employer continued pleasant, as usual; and I did not feel justified in disturbing them. I felt surprised when he told me that Mr. Redfern had himself congratulated him, and made some slight but graceful allusion to the disappointment to himself; but I concluded to keep silence still. What was the use of creating ill-will between them?

"Probably," I thought, "Mr. Redfern regrets his intemperate warmth and foolish words, and takes this method to let me know of it."

And I thought it a very good method too—infinitely pleasanter than a personal apology.

So the time flew swiftly by, and I had begun the preparations for our marriage, and our engagement was understood everywhere, when the storm which instinct had warned me of from the moment in which I had heard that bitter threatening oath, burst suddenly.

It was evening, and Robert and I were sitting together, talking such sweet nonsense as lovers will. We were alone, save for an aunt who resided with me, and who had fallen asleep in her easy-chair, when suddenly and unceremoniously the door was flung open wide, and three men entered.

Two of them were officers. The indignation which their rude entrance caused, gave place to sickening fear when I saw the third—George Redfern!

He fixed his hollow, burning eyes upon me. Even in that moment of excitement I was sensible of a shocked surprise at the strange change in him since last we met.

"Men, do your duty," he said briefly.

Next minute Robert was under arrest.

I don't know what I said or did in the first horror of it. I remember clinging around Robert's neck, and being pulled away—by auntie, I think—and some one asking, "What's the charge against him?" Then came the stern answer from George Redfern's lips: "Robbery!"

With that word my senses came back to me. I tore myself from auntie's arms and flew to my lover's side.

"It's a lie!" I cried, looking straight into Redfern's face. "He is innocent!"

Robert turned grateful troubled eyes upon me.

"God bless you, my true love!" he murmured sadly.

And then Redfern's stern low voice broke in again:

"Men, search him!"

I saw it done. I saw them draw forth a roll of notes—ten—of twenty-five pounds each, and forming a larger sum than Robert could have come by rightly. I heard Redfern identify them as his own, and declare that none but Robert had access to the safe or vault. And then I heard Robert say, with a moan of agony:

"Oh, God! My mother!"

I understood it all. I stepped up to George Redfern, and looked into his face.

"Come with me into another room," I said. "I will make a bargain with you. Let your men remain with their prisoner here." And he obeyed me.

When we were alone, I said passionately.

"Mr. Redfern, you are a villain! You have plotted to separate me from the man I love, and blast his reputation. You shall fail in both. You know that he is innocent."

He answered quietly.

"I am not his judge, Miss Craven. He himself will tell you that I placed the se notes in the safe in his presence, and that no one has since had access to it but himself. An hour ago I missed them. You saw where they were found. Let the law decide the rest."

I wrung my hands in agony.

"The law!" I cried. "Man, do you not know he has a mother whom such a charge will kill? Will you be a murderer?"

He caught my hand.

"No," he said hoarsely. "It is you—not I. You murder two of us, his mother when she learns the story of his guilt, from which you could save her—and me—you murder me! for the hour that sees you marry him sees me a corpse."

I snatched my hand away.

"I will marry him," I cried, "if the whole world calls him guilty!"

He answered quietly.

"And kill his mother?"

What could I do? Turn as I would, he brought me back to that at last.

The son's imprisonment on a shameful charge, and probable condemnation—for the plot was carefully laid—would kill his mother.

So I accepted the alternative he offered. I promised not to marry the man I loved during the lifetime of the man I hated.

"Never while I live," he said.

That was my oath, and I have kept it.

We went back together. George Redfern formally withdrew the charge he made, and gave one of the notes to each officer as a bribe for silence.

So Robert and I were parted, and his mother's life was saved.

And the world wondered, and called me a coquette, and "hard to please," and a year went by, and found me twenty-two—unmarried still—Robert's true love still, and miserable.

How many times had I seen George Redfern during that year? More than a hundred times. He had come to me praying, pleading for love—oh, how vainly! Often as I saw him, though, I noted how he changed—so terribly—so rapidly! Worn almost to a shadow. Pale, with all the life in him seeming to be centered in his burning eyes. They seemed lit with the fires of madness.

Poor George Redfern! It would be hard if I should not give him pity who gave me so much love.

The end came suddenly. One winter's night a messenger summoned the two whom he had wronged to his bedside. He was dying.

Just the same as ever, strange, abrupt, half-crazed. He took Robert's hand without noticing me, and stared into his eyes.

"I've brought you pain and sorrow, haven't I? Ah, that's nothing! You have brought me down to death. I loved that woman—loved her. Ah, Heaven, that doesn't express it! I became a villain for her sake. I liked you, Robert. I meant to make you partner some day. Kate," turning suddenly towards me, "you know I took the notes out of the safe. No matter; I've made amends. I'm dying, and Robert Dene is my heir."

It was true. We remained with him till the last. In the cold quiet morning he was cold and quiet too—at rest.

"You may marry her very soon," he said in dying, "but not while I live."

Poor George Redfern! He loved me well. I wetted the spring daisies on his grave with tears before I took the freedom that his death had given. After that I laid sorrow by and married Robert.

He was rich now, and his mother to this day believed it was a lovers' quarrel that kept us apart so long. Better so, for thus the memory of the man who sought to blast our lives, and lost his own, is spared. And we can spare him in his grave, and pity, too.

For my life's romance had a blissful ending, and I am a happy woman after all.

I have made an analysis of samples of the Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, prepared by the Puttner Emulsion Co., and they have explained to me the details of their process. The ingredients used, and the mechanical processes to which they are successively subjected, enable this Company to prepare a permanent Emulsion without the use of acids or alkalies. This preparation has been known to me for many years, and when carefully prepared is certainly a great improvement upon the Crude Cod Liver Oil, not only being milder in flavor, but having the more substantial advantage of being in the best form for digestion or assimilation.

DR. J. D. LAFFERTY. Office at present in Hobart's Drug Store.
March 4th.

A ALARMING DISEASE AFFLICTING A NUMEROUS CLASS.

The disease commences with a slight derangement of the stomach, but, if neglected, it in time involves the whole frame, embracing the kidneys liver, pancreas, and, in fact, the entire glandular system, and the afflicted drags out a miserable existence until death gives relief from suffering. The disease is often mistaken for other complaints; but if the reader will ask himself the following questions, he will be able to determine whether he himself is one of the afflicted:—Have I distress, pain, or difficulty in breathing after eating? Is there a dull, heavy feeling attended by drowsiness? Have the eyes a yellow tinge? Does a thick, sticky, mucous gather about the gums and teeth in the mornings, accompanied by a disagreeable taste? Is the tongue coated? Is there pains in the side and back? Is there a fulness about the right side as if the liver were enlarging? Is there costiveness? Is there vertigo or dizziness when rising suddenly from a horizontal position? Are the secretions from the kidneys scanty and highly coloured, with a deposit after standing? Does food ferment soon after eating, accompanied by flatulence or a belching of gas from the stomach? Is there frequent palpitation of the heart? These various symptoms may not be present at one time, but they torment the sufferer in turn as the dreadful disease progresses. If the case be one of long standing, there will be a dry, hacking cough, attended after a time by expectoration. In very advanced stages the skin assumes a dirty brownish appearance, and the hands and feet are covered by a cold, sticky perspiration. As the liver and kidneys become more and more diseased, rheumatic pains appear, and the usual treatment proves entirely unavailing against this latter agonising disorder. The origin of this malady is indigestion or dyspepsia, and a small quantity of the proper medicine will remove the disease if taken in its incipiency. It is most important that the disease should be promptly and properly treated in its first stages when a little medicine will effect a cure, and even when it has obtained a strong hold the correct remedy should be prosecuted in until every vestige of the disease is eradicated, until the appetite has returned, and the digestive organs restored to a healthy condition. The surest and most effectual remedy for this distressing complaint is "Seigel's Curative Syrup," a vegetable preparation sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors throughout the world, and by the proprietors, A. J. White, Limited, 77, Farringdon Road, London, E.C. This Syrup strikes at the very foundation of the disease, and drives it root and branch, out of the system.

Market Place, Pocklington, York,
October 2nd, 1882.

Sir—Being a sufferer for years with dyspepsia in all its worst forms, and after spending pounds in medicines, I was at last persuaded to try Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup, and am thankful to say have derived more benefit from it than any other medicine I ever took, and would advise any one suffering from the same complaint to give it a trial, the results they would soon find out for themselves. If you like to make use of this testimonial you are quite at liberty to do so.
Yours respectfully,
(Signed) R. TURNER.

Seigel's Operating Pills are the best family physic that has ever been discovered. They cleanse the bowels from all irritating substances and leave them in a healthy condition. They cure costiveness.

St. Mary Street, Peterborough,
November 29th, 1881.

Sir—It gives me great pleasure to inform you of the benefit I have received from Seigel's Syrup. I have been troubled for years with dyspepsia but after a few doses of the Syrup, I found relief, and after taking two bottles of it feel quite cured.
I am Sir, yours truly,
WILLIAM BRENT.

Mr. A. J. White.

Hemsingham, Whitehaven, Oct. 16th, 1882.

Mr. A. J. White—Dear Sir—I was for some time afflicted with piles, and was advised to give Mother Seigel's Syrup a trial, which I did. I am now happy to state that it has restored me to complete health.
I remain yours respectfully,
Signed JOHN H. LIGHTFOOT.

[illegible] 6th August 1881.

Dear Sir—I wish to tell you that Mr. Henry Hiller, of Yatesbury, Wilts, informs me that he suffered from a severe form of indigestion for upwards of four years and took no end of doctor's medicine without the slightest effect, and declares Mother Seigel's Syrup which he got from you was the best.
Yours [illegible]
Signed N. WEBB
Chemist, Devizes.

Mr. Weir.

September 8th, 1881.

Dear Sir—I find the sale of Seigel's Syrup increasing rapidly. Those who have tried it speak very highly of its medicinal virtues, one calling it a blessing, another a "God-send to dyspeptic people." I always recommend it with confidence.
I am truly yours,
Signed C. VINCENT A. WILLIS
Chemist & Dentist.

Mr. A. J. White.

Dundas, Sept. 8th, 1881.

Mr. Dear Sir—Your Syrup and Pills are still very popular with my customers, many saying they are the best family medicines possible.
The other day a customer came for two bottles of Syrup and said Mother Seigel had saved the life of his wife and he added one of these bottles I am sending fifteen miles away to a friend who is very ill. I have much faith in it.
The sale keeps up wonderfully, in fact, one would hardly almost think the people were beginning to breakfast, dine and sup on Mother Seigel's Syrup, the demand is so constant and the satisfaction so great.
I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,
(Signed) W. W. BOKER.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again, I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you.
Address Dr. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address.
