MORE THAN PENITENCE REQUIRED

It is conceded President Roosevelt has not been nearly as successful in his efforts to bring about prosperity in the United States as he had hoped to be. But the President is not "withholding his hand from the plow" and is apparently determined to press forward to the mark of his high calling. In recent speeches he has so declared himself, and has been ably seconded by his Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, who, in an address in New York city last week, assumed the role of confessor of the past national shortcomings, and admitted that the United States had set "the vicious examply of high tariffs." He declared "We have now repented." He further asserted that "extreme nationalism, if persisted in, is destined soon to wreck our entire structure of Western civilization." Continuing, the Secretary of State adduced recent declarations of the neighboring government in favor of negotiating trade agreements with other nations as frank admission that the United States had erred in the past and he declared:

"Just as we set the vicious example of erecting the trade barriers of high tariffs which induced others to follow us, so now we are asking other nations to join us in an attempt to undo the damage our collective action has worked. We wish to break down all the artificial and excessive impediments put in the way of world commerce, not only in our own interest, but for the benefit of all others as well, since only by restoring the whole world can individual countries hope to remain economically healthy long."

The Secretary further characterized orderly international trade as "one of the greatest educators, civilizers and peacemakers," and said "A hermit nation means a hermit civilization." He pointed out, that after the war the United States played the "merry game of booming business by both selling on credit and buying from ourselves" through loans to foreign nations. When it was found that many of the loans could not be immediately repaid, he said, "a great deal of our glittering volume of exports became simply a present of several billion dollars' worth of commodities to other peoples."

There is certainly a great deal of truth in what the right hand man in President Roosevelt's Cabinet says. Now let the courageous President cease waiting for other nations to radically reduce their tariffs, and courageously lead the way. The trouble is that when reformation is advocated it so often ends in talk. They all begin to make excuses, aye even Canadian statesmen are among the hesitants. Why not begin by radically reducing the taxes between these neighboring countries?

THE RADIO QUESTION

When the Canadian Radio Commission was first brought into being we were asked to withold criticism until the Commission had time to show what it could do. This was two years ago and surely it has had sufficient time to justify the claims made for it. Any person owning a radio will, we feel sure, say they are decidedly unsatisfactory. On Sunday last the lamentable position our Radio Commission occupies was brought home with new force when the Remembrance Day exercises were broadcast in this section of Canada by only one station and that an independent one. As a matter of fact the Commission station in Toronto is rarely tuned in by radio owners in this section, only 85 miles away from the studio. It is more than annoying to get absolutely nothing for the two dollars we are forced to disgorge and have to tune in to the very fine programs put on by the two great broadcasting systems of the United States, while our own pitiful system plays the part of drones without producing any honey. It is very humiliating. An all-world broadcast on Sunday was carried by CFRB, with wonderful clarity, but CRCT was a roar of interference and worse than useless. The people are becoming "fed up" with promises and failures of the Commission and demand, in the language of youth, that that body either "put up or shut up." We would prefer that they would shut up—disband.

PLAYING WET NURSE

It is funny when you think of it! The grand old Province of Ontario has gone into the wet nurse business. This was done under the late provincial Government, headed by Mr. Henry. There are those mean enough to say the wet nurse incident was one of the issues which decided the election. Why, they say, should Pa Dionne be assisted in bringing up his five girls at the public expense? For ourselves, we think this a rather mean attitude to take. At the same time we hope the incident will not be made a precedent. It might create serious difficulties and misunderstandings. Pa Dionne has already given notice that he will take a hand in the game when the young ladies reach marriageable age.

It is now explained that ex-Premier Henry expresed determination to face the new Legislature as opposition leader, because he considers he is entitled to show that he can make a better record as such, than fell to his lot as Premier.

British Premier Ramsay MacDonald, refused to orate while in Canada, but our cooler sea coast air seems to have loosened up his vocal cords. He is to give his first big public address since his return home, on Friday next, when he will be the principal speaker at the banquet of the Lord Mayor of London.

The women have a weapon at their disposal which no burglar can face, namely a good healthy scream. An incident to prove this occurred at Meaford on Monday, when a lone burglar entered the office of the Knight Manufacturing Co. The young lady in charge let out a perfectly developed scream which brought speedy help. The burglar knew she had the drop on him and faded out of sight before he could be captured, leaving $1,500 behind him in the safe. A healthy scream is a valuable possession for any girl, and as for the women, a united yell from them could nip a war in the bud. Think it over, ladies, and be thankful for your vocal birthright.

HEALTH

PNEUMOTHORAX

When tuberculosis is diagnosed, what is the patient to do? The answer to this question is REST. This is what the doctor will tell him to do, because everyone will agree that in the treatment of tuberculosis, the most important point is rest, physical and mental.

In tuberculosis, the lung is diseased, and through rest the activity of the lung is diminished and so the healing forces are given a better chance to arrest the disease process, halt the progress of the disease, and bring about a cure.

At birth, air first enters the lungs when breathing begins. This air, which is at atmospheric pressure, causes the lungs to expand, filling the chest cavity. Owing to their elasticity, the lungs tend to contract against the atmospheric pressure, and this creates a slight negative pressure or suction in the chest cavity outside of the lung itself.

Between the lung and the chest wall there is the pleura, a smooth covering of two layers, the larger one of which covers the lung, and the other, the inner side of the chest wall. In the act of breathing, these two coverings glide the one over the other.

Within recent years, artificial pneumothorax has been used to place a diseased lung at complete rest, in order to increase the chance of healing. This is accomplished by introducing air into the pleural cavity, the space between the two coverings or layers of pleura. The introducing of air into the pleural cavity reduces the negative pressure that is normal in that cavity and so equalizes the pressure that is exerted on the lungs from within and without. The result is that the lung collapses and is at rest.

Not all patients require pneumothorax, nor all cases suitable for such treatment. For those cases which are selected after proper examinations and studies there is no doubt that this form of treatment has revolutionized the outlook. The treatment must be maintained by injections of air for months and possibly years. This does not mean that any less care is to be given as regards the other points of treatment. It does mean, however, that much can be done for cases that were considered hopeless; it speeds up recovery in many cases, lessens the chance of spread to the other lung, reducing sputum and so minimizes the chance of spreading the disease and, altogether, represents a great advance in the treatment of a disease which is still one of the most common and persistent enemies of mankind.

THE hunting season is here. In Canada the wine of early frosts is in the air and the maples, like banners of crimson and gold against the dark friendly evergreens, proclaim that once again the "red gods" hold high carnival.

The woods are at their best—the moose is slick and black, the buck deer has his horns burnished to his fancy, the coat of the black bear shines like silk and the lustrous robe of the grizzly is a study in dark and grey. The big-horn sheep is restless and alert, the mountain goat snow white and the caribou in the prime. The grouse and woodcock are plump and contented in the coverts, while the ducks and geese are gathering in favourite feeding grounds in preparation for their long flight south.

The game areas of Canada, scattered from ocean to ocean, are readily accessible from any part of the continent. It is not a country for the wealthy sportsman only; the hunter with moderate means may also be suited. Local residents can enjoy a trip at a very reasonable cost. Sportsmen from other lands are welcome and are only asked to show their appreciation of the privilege of access to her game fields by obeying the hunting laws and observing the ethics of sportsmanship.

A publication entitled "Canada's Game Fields" which should be of interest to sportsmen planning a hunting trip in Canada may now be had upon application to the National Parks of Canada, Department of the Interior, Ottawa.
