SEASONABLE POETRY

Gallaway's Hats have all arrived and opened out to view.

Promises a spectacle unsurpassed for style and cheapness too.

They're snapped up by the thousand, as anyone may see

Who chooses to visit himself of this opportunity.

His Hats are all the fashion, the latest come to town,

From the high stiff hat in English to the American with low crown.

He has them layered and raw edge, with cord and ribbon too,

In fur and wool, in light and dark, in almost every hue.

His Glove Department also when opened out to view,

Contains a good range of Gloves from Kid to Kangaroo.

To those who may be strangers he'd say just one word more,

His Store is down on PRINCESS STREET, and his number 94.

SAY SPRING IS WELCOME.

We know the gentle Spring. Thy best do to—
The earth with many eloquent remembrances
Of blossom-laden trees, and season be spread
With verdant things to wit—the organ grinders.

Thy breath is laden with a hundred scents
That's odorous from roadway, lane, and stubble
Come waves of balm, and when we turn from dinner
We get sweet draughts of burning garden rubble.

At thy sweet kiss the lips of earth grow monster
Thou weakest unto life each floral singer
And even though thou takest away the oyster
Thou dost amend by making eggs the cheaper

And so we bless thee, gentle Spring, with blessing
As true as those of Anthony's for Cæsar
For art thou not for months at least suppressing
The sausage chopper and grubble cleaner?

A DIFFICULT SITUATION.

An English Society Tale—How a Woman's Love and Strategy Won the Day—Man's Trust.

"Tell, wilt thou have this woman to be thy wedded wife?" Is that the form of your boudoire? Ah! I think it comes a few minutes before that. But we will not be particular for a moment, you remember, perfect secrecy.

I repeated the words—Perfect secrecy. I kissed her pretty hand, and was bold enough to ask if I was to be allowed no more. "No! let there be no secrets to keep," she said, shrinking back. I liked her for her pretty prudence, and felt very true to her in my heart, though rather in disgrace with my judgment.

Pretty Lucy Lorimer walked gravely into the house. She left her red cloak in the hall, and we proceeded to the breakfast room, and found my mother and sister, and Mrs. Marmaduke already at the table.

'We never wait for lovers,' said the lady. 'They never think of any one but themselves; and——' No body knows what more she would have said. Lucy wisely stopped her with a kiss; and such a smile of triumph did Mrs. Marmaduke then cast in a circular fashion all round the table that we all laughed aloud. Then my dear mother said, 'I beg your pardon, Alfred!' at which Julia cried, 'Oh, mamma!' and upset the sugar basin. 'Ah, Miss Manners, your time will come, said Mrs. Marmaduke. 'Lucy, my dear, Lizzie says her face-ache is just as bad as ever;' at which Lucy laughed and helped Julia with the scattered sugar, and said with the most enchanting effrontery, 'Oh, Alfred! I wish you would finish and go. I am so ashamed of myself I can't speak!'

Too words rang in my ears, 'Oh, Alfred!' Very few women had ever called me by my name—no woman in such a way and with such a voice and smile. It told everything, as it was intended it should do. I got over the feeling as well as I could. I laughed and talked nonsense. I answered my mother's tender glances with significant nods; I looked bravely at Julia till she was quite out of countenance. I put my hand confidingly into Mrs. Marmaduke's fair palm as she stretched it forth in recognition of my position across the table, and I rose up from that memorable breakfast an engaged man. Just as I left the room, I heard my mother say to Lucy—'And is it so, my dear one?' And I saw Lucy drop her face on that kind mother's shoulder, and burst into sudden tears. I walked away, not moody, but overpowered by a strange seriousness. What had happened? What was going to happen? I was sporting on the brink of a volcano I knew; but what the result of the coming explosion was to be I did not know. Only Lucy knew, little beautiful dazzling butterfly—she knew; and I would stand by her to the last, anyhow, and anywhere. Yet I felt a good deal like the hero of a fairy tale; like that Prince, for instance, whose perplexity when he was told to cut off his beloved white cat's head must have nearly equalled my own. But I had promised Lucy to run away with her, and to that promise, whatever threatened and whatever came, I intended to be faithful. So I left the ladies together, and wandered away. It was a wonderful day. I felt, as it were, swept up and carried away in a fitting storm of women's sighed forth happy hopes, and pelted with blessings which came to me through prophetic smiles, like summer showers when the sun is shining, and the rainbows come and go in the sky. There was a new atmosphere in the house, at it was all got up in honor of Lucy and me. My mother came flattering—'Oh, my dear boy!' 'Not yet, mother; not yet.' And got off laughing, and looking shy and more awkward than if I could have said that all her good thoughts were true. Julia had to be threatened with my eternal adherence to the single state, to make her silent; and to Mrs. Marmaduke I had to say boldly that I did not know whether Lucy and I quite understood each other yet.

I got away till luncheon time, hiding myself in the woods; retreating, as well as the limited area of our property allowed, from the haunts of men. But at luncheon I found my sister, Kate Thornhill, and she had brought a note from Lady Burton, my oldest sister.

'Here, read this from Mary,' said Kate; 'and I really think her the loveliest little creature—how lucky you are! Why, Alfred! how oddly you look!'

'My dear Kate,' I said, with condescending gravity, 'what are you talking about?'

'Oh, so like a man! How provoking! And I have driven over seven miles to tell you how glad I am; and so lucky that Mary is with me. You don't deserve to be so happy as long as you have that indescribably perplexed look on your face. It is so very difficult to believe that you are going to be married!'

'Very, Kate; but I will write Mary a note and tell her everything; and then you can read the note together when you get home.'

'Do; there's a darling!' said Kate; and she went off with a pretty scolding look on her face, and left me not knowing which way to turn, or what to do, like a man lost in a mist. But I wrote these words to Lady Burton:

'DEAREST MARY,

'Thank you. But, please, just at present do not believe anything you hear, and only half you see, in relation to the presumed future of your affectionate brother.

'A. M.'

It was a real relief to me when I put Kate into her carriage, and waved my hand to her in a parting salute. As the day went on the perplexities increased and the difficulties grew greater. I felt my changed position in a hundred different ways. Old Laurence was so awfully respectful; the young girl who waited on Julia Graves aloof in the passage, and hid herself behind a door, the housemaid made a solemn curtsey, between the disadvantages of two great cans of hot water when I met her in the passage when the dressing bell rang. I heard old Slade I was me solemnly out of the half-closed store room door, and on the dressing table was a little bouquet of flowers sent me by the sentimental old gardener, all twisted up with shamrock sprays. If I had not been blessed with very high animal spirits, if I had not made a clear conscience by doing all I could to dissuade Lucy that morning I must have succumbed under the pressure of circumstances, turned coward, literally run away, and given up the little lady who had so bewitched me to her fate. What that fate would then be, or even what at that moment her life was, I did not know, and I could not guess. But I had a general impression that now, not to play the play out would be a sort of giving up of Lucy to the foes, and so I stuck the shamrock, all entwined about an English rose, into my coat, and went down stairs, dimly hoping that old Peter Griffiths, the Welsh gardener, had put some proper speech in the language of flowers as my service, and that my button hole was the mouth that uttered it.

A sort of desperation had come upon me, a desperation of a playful, wilful, never care about anything kind. Let people believe what they liked to believe, it was no concern of mine. I should go to London, and I should have one of the loveliest girls in the world with me. And then? Then—how should I know? It was the lady's contrivance from first to last. I was no more than her most obedient slave. And so all life, for the time, became like a scene in a play, and I took the part assigned to me, never thinking of consequences.

I thought Mrs. Marmaduke rather silent at dinner; my mother was nervous, and Julia shy. Lucy and I did the dinner-table conversation with ease, and with such success as to make the others talk before long. I flung a leaf of my shamrock to Mrs. Marmaduke, and asked her to observe how perfectly the true Irish sort flourished when transplanted to our English home; and thus started her on a long rambling declaration of how she had done her best by the shamrock that I proved so hardly, but that it had grown but wild, and become a thought too unruly. 'But I was never her mother,' said Mrs. Marmaduke, 'and I have done my best.'

In the evening Lucy sang. She chose the drollest songs that she could think of, requiring the distinct articulation of torrents of ridiculous words; and we all laughed wildly except Mrs. Marmaduke. She put out her large, soft, white hand once, and laid it on my arm. There was a very uncertain look in her generally saucy eyes; fear and pleading were contending there; and she whispered as she rose to leave the room.

'Heaven bless you! but surely you it always know that I did my best.'

I made her a fine speech, and laid my hand on my heart; yet she turned away gravely and left me wondering at the change.

The next day was Sunday. As we went to church that every villager gazed at me as though he knew the truth, if so, he felt wiser than I did. As we took our places in our family pew I knew that Lucy and I were the observed of all observers. The prayers seemed to me to have new and personal meanings, and the psalms and lessons seemed to have special reference to my difficult circumstances. I felt as if I were losing my identity, and becoming somebody else, by the force of being drifted out of my own life and into Lucy's.

A MINISTER'S ESCAPE.

From the Asylum to the Bosom of His Home—How it was Done.

A prominent minister residing in Vermont made the following statement, which is herewith reprinted entire:

To the Editor of the Herald:

I have always shrunk from appearing prominently before the public, but a sense of duty I owe humanity and the world prompts me to ask this opportunity of making a brief statement in your paper.

Whether it be true with others I can not say, but during my entire life I have frequently been conscious that something was slowly and silently working to undermine my health and life. What it was I could not tell, but some enemy of my being was devouring me within. I was certain. At times I would seem comparatively well and then I would be attacked with the most distressing symptoms. I would feel peculiar pains in various parts of my body, my head would seem heavy, my respiration laboured; my appetite would be ravenous one day and I would loathe food the day following. Then again I would lose all interest in life, would feel weary without exertion, would become sleepy at mid-day and restless at night. Occasionally my breathing would be laboured and my heart almost motionless, while at other times it would palpitate violently. I thought these troubles were the result of malaria, and I treated them accordingly, but I got no better. Shortly afterward my stomach became deranged, my food failed to digest, and the fluids I passed were of a peculiar color and color. And yet I did not realize that these things meant anything serious. Finally I consulted a number of eminent physicians, each one of whom took a different view as to the cause of my troubles. One said I was suffering from brain disease, another spinal difficulty, others heart affections, kidney disease, etc. My symptoms were terrible, and in the hope of relief I was cauterized, cupped, blistered and subjected to almost every known form of treatment. During one of these attacks, while at Red Bank, N.J., a physician was called and left a prescription. After he had gone I requested a friend to go and ask him what he thought of my trouble. The reply was "Oh, he will be all right in a few days; it is only an attack of delirium tremens." He was at once informed that this was impossible, as I had never used any kind of intoxicating drinks, whereupon he returned, made inquiries and changed his prescription. But all the care of my friends and physicians availed nothing. I grew worse constantly, and what is most terrible to think of I did not know what ailed me nor could I find any one who did.

During the summer and fall of last year my pulse ranged from 120 to 130 per minute; I had no relish for food, and was indeed a most pitiable object. I continued in this state until last December, when I became unconscious and lost my reason, though I had two physicians in whom myself and friends placed implicit confidence. In this condition I was taken to Brattleboro, Vt., for the purpose of being placed in the insane asylum. I remained there until last April, being attended all the while by my faithful wife who never left me and believed that some disease and not insanity was the cause of all my trouble. I regained consciousness in March last and insisted upon being taken home. The physicians advised that I remain, but I insisted upon leaving, and we began the journey, travelling slowly. I was met at the dock by a friend whom I recognized and then I became again unconscious and remained so for over a week. When I once more recognized my friend and knew my surroundings I determined to try, as a last resort, a treatment of which I had heard much but knew nothing. Neither myself nor friends had much faith that it or anything could help me, but we resolved to try. We accordingly dismissed the physicians, gave up all other remedies, and I rejoice to say that with the blessing of Him who guided us I am to-day well, mar. having not been so vigorous for many years, and I owe it to the wonderful almost miraculous power of Warner's Safe Cure, the remedy which I used.

You can well imagine how grateful I must feel under the circumstances, and like a new convert, I earnestly desire to all who are suffering should know and avail themselves of this means of recovery. Had it not been for the remedy above named I should doubtless now be within the walls of an asylum or in my grave. The great trouble with my case was that no one seemed to know what I was afflicted with, and I am positive that thousands of people in America to-day are in the same or a similar condition, and do not know its cause. Kidney troubles are the most deceptive of all diseases. They have no symptoms of their own, but often show the symptoms of nearly every known complaint. I know that people are dying every day from supposed consumption, apoplexy, heart disease, spinal complaint, and many other diseases, when, could the real cause be known, it would be found to originate in the kidneys. In their advanced stages kidney troubles are the most terrible of all known maladies, as my own experience can fully verify. That I had Bright's disease of the kidneys there can be no doubt. That the symptoms were those of many other diseases is equally certain, and that I was doomed to terrible death had I not been saved as I was I am positive. The following letters just received, confirm this:

VERMONT ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE, BRATTLEBORO, Vermont, Oct. 30, 1882.

Rev. E. D. Hopkins:

DEAR SIR,—Yours of the 21st inst. received. We congratulate you not only upon the continuance of your health, but also upon its apparent continual improvement. Few persons, I think, have passed through so exhausting an experience as you and rallied from it. Certainly I cannot recall one who came to us in so critical, and for days and even weeks in so hopeless a state for amendment as you, and who survived and recovered from it; for, I think, you may now consider yourself recovered and no longer on the convalescent list. Hoping for the continuance of your present health, with the best wishes from all here.

I am, yours truly, J. DRAPER.

Oceanic, N.Y., Nov. 2, 1882.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Replying to your letter I would say I have been acquainted with my highly valued friend, the Rev. E. D. Hopkins, about eighteen months, and very intimately acquainted for about six months past. For a little more than five months he was an inmate of my house, and we enjoyed constant intercourse with each other. When he came in April last he was almost a perfect wreck in point of health. I thought he had come to us but to die. Soon afterwards he began the use of H. H. Warner & Co.'s remedies, namely the Safe Cure, Safe Nervine and Safe Pills. From almost the time he began their use his improvement was very marked and wonderful, and when he left us, after having taken two dozen bottles, he was like a new man. The change was the most remarkable I ever witnessed.

SAMUEL MILLER,
(Pastor of the Presbyterian Church.)

In view, therefore, of these facts and with a hope that all who read this may take timely warning, I make this open statement freely and for the good of my fellow men.—Sincerely,

REV. E. D. HOPKINS.

IMPORTANT TO STEAM USERS AND ENGINEERS.

How to Keep Boilers Clean.

FISHER'S PATENT AUTOMATIC BOILER CLEANER, when properly applied to a steam boiler, never fails to remove all from water before they become baked into scale. This result is accurate and certain in its action, and will convert a new boiler. A boiler kept clean means a saving in fuel and repairs, as well as a reduced liability to explosion.

MUDDY DEPOSITS AND SEDIMENTS

Having the agency for 40th section of the country, we are prepared to fit them up and guarantee them to do all the patentee claims for them.
