THE LOVER'S SACRIFICE.

Tessie Rivers was just twenty, and looking back over that short space of life she felt that she would not quite care to live the years over again.

Her childhood had been as sweet and bright as love and wealth could make it, until the good father had died so utterly ruined financially that nothing was left for his widow and only child except a small, but pretty and pleasant residence, and an exceedingly meagre income derived from a certain property so unfortunately bequeathed by his many creditors.

Since the death of that loving indulgent but most incompetent parent, the girl had known almost every vicissitude of trouble and privation possible to the experience of the young the sensitive and refined.

Fortunately the elegant, finely educated and rarely accomplished Mrs. Rivers was competent to instruct her child in school or ship as well as in the subtle lore of etiquette affected by the social circles from which she had been ostracized by her pecuniary misfortunes. And the daughter, being dutiful and tractable as well as sensible, had profited by this gentle but thorough institution.

At twenty a Vassarite might almost have passed Tessie Rivers for her condition, and many a pampered favorite of wealth and aristocratic pretentions might have coveted her unaffected grace and dignity of demeanor more perhaps than her rich, vivid and healthful loveliness.

But she was not at all satisfied with the station to which fate had assigned her. She was sick to the soul of this perpetual struggle between hidden want and ostensible modest comfort. She longed for a life, not of utter indolence and clogging luxury, but of perfect freedom from pinching cares—a life filled with sweeter possibilities and broader purposes, and that might bring a few seasons of rest.

"I should not quite care to live my twenty years over again," she averred mentally, as divesting herself of her becoming black cloth cloak and prettily plumed black velvet hat, she entered the cheerful room where her mother was rather eagerly awaiting her coming.

"Are you tired, dear?" questioned Mrs. Rivers, tenderly, as she poured the tea she had made ready an hour before.

"Not at all, mamma," answered Tessie, taking her seat at the cozy table. "When one's task is interesting, one does not become fatigued easily; if I had nothing less pleasant to do than to arrange Lucille Carrington's flowers and flounces, I should be happy, I think."

"Ah, Tessie," smiled the mother, "the most humble labor would never be distasteful to you so long as you might find an element of the æsthetic in it."

"And if I might always serve a lady as considerate and gracious as Miss Carrington," she added. "She never patronizes me; she treats me as she might a trusted friend. And yet I am in a rebellious mood to-night—I am, indeed mamma. Why should she be given so much and I so little? The lace that drapes the rose silk dress she wears—the single diamond on her white hand—the pearls that gleam on her bosom—if coin to transmute into money would lift the mortgage from this dear old home and this heavy burden from our hearts."

Mrs. Rivers sighed as she sipped her tea silently, choosing neither to contemplate nor discuss an impending trouble unless that it might be averted.

"I do not care to think nor speak of a misfortune that cannot be prevented, my dear," she observed after a sorrowful pause. "To grieve in prospective is but folly. Heaven has proportioned our strength to our trials, and to rebel against the inevitable is unwise; beside, Tessie, I am sure that Monreith Carrington is much too kind and generous to distress us about that mortgage."

"But I should prefer not to appeal to Mr. Carrington's generosity, mamma, and if you love me you will not do so," returned the girl, quickly, as she blushed before the tender, inquiring eyes turned toward her.

"You fancy he would think you indelicate in request a favour since he has honored you with a preference that you may not reciprocate," suggested Mrs. Rivers, "but you wrong him, Tessie. He is too astute, as well as too magnanimous, to misjudge you. I wish, my love, you could give him some little hope. As his wife you might be very happy, Tessie."

"And I might be very miserable," protested Tessie; "kindly as the family treat me now they might behave very differently toward me as the wife of the only son and brother of whom they are so proud and expect so much. They might regard me as an interloper, as an ambitious creature caring less for my husband than for the pleasant life he could give me, and as I am rather fond of approbation, I might not find the situation agreeable. Beside, mamma——"

The young lady paused, growing slightly pale; and a vague expression of yearning and pain shadowed her bonny brown eyes.

"Beside what?" urged her mother gently.

"Never mind what, mamma dear," was the grave answer; "but I have had dreams of a very different and much more passionate and enthusiastic affection than I can ever feel for Monreith—much as I honor him. But let us not discuss the subject, if you please."

The next morning Mr. Carrington called.

"Lucille sent me," he explained politely, but his voice betrayed the pleasure and gratification with which he had become his sister's messenger.

The trivial errand performed, he still lingered, and Tessie, knowing why, began to tremble.

Her fond and handsome suitor pleased her, and she was keenly conscious of the honor he offered her, but the girlish heart refused to be wholly satisfied. And yet he was a noble fellow and loved her too well to deny her anything she might desire. This pitiful struggle for the simplest comforts of life would be over forever. She could have velvets and satins and jewels—an elegant carriage all her own—horses fit to carry a princess—a home like a palace, and her life would be one long dream of splendor and that rest that seemed so desirable. And the good, unselfish mother—the dear mother who had known so much of sorrow, would be the happiest of them all, and by and by she would forget the old haunting fancies that had been so sweet, and she would learn to love Monreith as well as he deserved to be loved.

"Will you not give me my answer, Tessie?" pleaded her wooer. "I have waited so long."

"If I were only sure I would make you happy," she stammered, undecided.

"You would dear," he persisted earnestly. "I should be happy in caring for you. My child, I love you so unselfishly that I should make any honorable sacrifice to save you from the pain or trouble of a single hour."

Little did Monreith Carrington guess that this assertion was to be sorely tested before that day would be done.

"And I," responded Tessie, in odd abstracted, dreamy tones, "should rather endure the worst in silence and alone than feel that one I loved was suffering for me."

"I should be glad to suffer for you if by that I might win you," he said.

But he had won her, and a few minutes later he left her, the touch of her rosy mouth yet warm on his lips, and she went back to her mother's room wearing on her pretty white hand the jeweled token of her betrothal.

"Mamma, dear, I have accepted Mr. Carrington," she said simply.

"I am very glad, Tessie," replied Mrs. Rivers. "I have feared that you would refuse him, and possibly for the sake of John Eustis."

"John has never asked me to be his wife, mamma," returned the girl, wearily, and something in the suddenly spiritless attitude of the graceful, drooping figure, some vague, unsatisfied expression of the strangely pale face half hidden by the loose tawny curls, disturbed and pained her watchful parent.

When Carrington reached his office he found a gentleman there waiting for him.

"Ah, Mr. Eustis. You wished to see me?" he observed lightly.

"Yes, I particularly desired to see you to-day concerning a mortgage you hold, just due, and that I wish to pay," was the prompt explanation.

Carrington had quite forgotten the claim he had against the property of Mrs. Rivers, and that he had only secured from a clamoring creditor of her diseased husband that he might befriend the girl whom he so dearly loved.

"Are you prepared to do this?" he inquired wonderingly of the young man whose income was decidedly not opulent. "And pray I know your motive for wishing to do it?"

The fine, honest face of John Eustis flushed slightly, but he evidently did not consider the question impertinent.

"Could I not have come entirely prepared I should not have come at all," he returned quietly. "My motive is to please and surprise the lady whom I expect to marry."

"For months I had dreamed how her sweet eyes would glisten when I should be able to assure her that I had saved her dear old home for her bonny sake."

Carrington listened, dazed, and pale to his bearded lips.

It was impossible to believe any falsity or littleness of John Eustis, and conceited, and egotistical he certainly was not. And it was equally impossible to suspect perfidy or sweet Tessie Rivers.

Carrington ventured a few subtle questions that were readily and innocently answered, and thus shrewdly learned the truth. There was not, nor had there ever been, any engagement between John Eustis and Tessie Rivers—only a life-long worship, understanding of tenderest affection and truest fidelity. He could understand now how the fair girl bound by no promises, doubtful for her future, and solicitous for her mother, had accepted what seemed wisest and best, while her soul was haunted by an unasked and unacknowledged love that might prove to be a shadow, a fantasy, a delusion after all, and with his whole noble heart he exonerated and pardoned her.

"I should make any honorable sacrifice to save you from the pain and trouble of a single hour," he had told her that morning, meaning it to the uttermost, and the time for the sacrifice had come.

The business was speedily and satisfactorily transacted, and Tessie's pleased young lover turned to go when his friend stopped him.

"I, too, wish to see Mrs. Rivers," he said. "I shall follow you presently. Do not leave the house till I shall have come. Promise me you will not, John."

The young man promised and hurried away, impatient to surprise Tessie with the proofs of his loyal and generous devotion.

"Oh, John, you ought not to have done this!" she cried, in a voice of regret and distress. "You could not afford it, and beside, something has happened, John, that made it unnecessary."

He gazed at her in mute wonder. The pain of her sweet eyes startled him.

"Why could I not afford it, my pet," he asked, gently, "when you are to share it? I have by and by, when you will be my own—my wife?"

"Oh, John," she gasped, "you never asked me to marry you, and now you are too late—oh, John too late!"

And then she covered her face and began to sob bitterly. The poor child had never hidden a sorrow from him in all her life. She had always gone to him for comfort in all her griefs, and it did not occur to her that it was not quite proper and consistent for him to console her for a grief like this.

But in the midst of her tears she suddenly remembered, and she fled away from his detaining hand to the farthest end of the parlor, only to meet Carrington, who had just come in.

"Tessie," he began, kindly, "I have made my sacrifice, and I have come to tell you. I know the whole story, just as you would tell me your self did you not wish to spare me pain. I do not blame you, little one. I am your friend and his. Go to him and comfort him. You will make him as happy as you could have made me had Heaven meant me to be your husband. I shall see your mamma and save you from all unpleasant explanations."

His goodness touched her. In her gratitude she could have knelt at his feet and kissed the kindly hands which led her back to her wondering lover.

The next moment he was gone, and John's arms were about her, and John's kisses were on her lips.

On Tessie's wedding morning she found among her bridal gifts a magnificent souvenir from Monerith Carrington, who retained for her all the delicate and chivalrous sentiment of such a friendship as only a noble gentleman can give to an adorned lady.

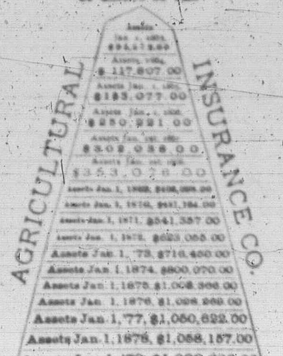
OF ASSETS OF THE

AGRICULTURAL INSURANCE CO.



Assets January 1st, 1880,

$1,137,549.00

Capital, $200,000. Net Surplus, $235,153.81.

THE ATTENTION of owners of Farm Property and Residences is invited to the above Pyramid, showing the uniform and sure growth, during the last seventeen of its 27 years of existence, of a fire insurance company whose charter limits its business to their class of property—the Agricultural Insurance Company, of Watertown, N.Y. The figures represent the amount set apart at the dates given for the PROTECTION OF POLICY HOLDERS.

Twenty-seven years of patient toil has made this the strongest and largest Company doing an exclusive Dwelling Business in the United States, if not in the world. It now issues 45,000 policies a year. No other like Company can show such growth and increase.

The history of this Company proves that a LARGE business, well scattered, managed with prudence, can be done with a very small proportion of each risk, and afford perfect security, which will grow stronger every year.

While nine-tenths of the "Mutual" fire insurance companies, and many of the Stock Companies, have failed, on account of reckless or extravagant management, or doing too small a business, the OLD AGRICULTURAL, by economy, energy and prudence, has every year added a substantial amount to its Assets, for the indemnity of its patrons, and is now occupies a position in the confidence of the public second to no other Company.

From year to year it spreads the base of its Pyramid and gains strength.

EXTRACT FROM CHARTER.—Article 7. This Company is formed for the purpose of insuring Farmers' Dwellings, Private Residences, Barns and Outbuildings, with their contents, and other property not more hazardous," and is strictly confined to this class of property.

The whole frame is greatly invigorated by Pepper's Tonic, the mental faculties brightened, the constitution greatly strengthened, and a return to robust health certain. Bottles, 32 doses, is 6d.; next size, 11s. Sold by chemists everywhere. The name of S. Pepper, Bedford Laboratory, London, must be on the label. There is no Tonic so certain in effect as Pepper's Quinine and Iron. It is strongly recommended to residents in India and the Colonies, and should always be kept ready for use in every case of fever or febrile condition.

TARAXACUM AND PODOPHYLLIN—Prepared only by J. Pepper, London. This Fluid combination, extracted from medicinal roots, is now used instead of blue pill and calomel for the cure of dyspepsia, biliousness, and all symptoms of congestion of the liver, which are generally felt beneath the shoulders, headache, drowsiness, no appetite, furred tongue, disagreeable taste in the morning, giddiness, disturbance of the stomach, and feeling of general depression. It sets the sluggish liver in motion, very slightly acts on the bowels, gives a sense of health and comfort within 24 hours. It is the safest medicine. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is a fluid made only by J. Pepper, Bedford Laboratory, London, whose name is on every label. Bottles, 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. Sold by all chemists. A most valuable and essential medicine for India, Australia, the Cape and colonies generally.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER will darken gray hair, and in a few days completely bring back the natural colour. The effect is superior to that produced by an instantaneous dye, and does not injure the skin. Large bottles, 3s. 6d.—Lockyer's is equal to the most expensive hair restorer.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER is the best for restoring grey hair to its former colour. It produces a perfectly natural shade and is absolutely harmless. Recommended for destroying scurf and encouraging growth of new hair.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER—Sulphur being highly prized for its stimulant, cleansing, healthful action on the hair glands—LOCKYER'S RESTORER is strongly recommended. It is most agreeable in use and never fails in its action on the colour glands always restoring and maintaining that which has been lost. No other hair dressing is requisite. Large bottles, 3s. 6d. Sold by chemists, hairdressers and perfumers in London, the country, and throughout the year. Lockyer's is equal to any of the high priced preparations.

CENTENNIAL AWARDS

WEBER & CO.

PIANO-FORTE MANUFACTURERS,

KINGSTON, ONTARIO,

Have been Awarded by the International Jury at the World's Fair, Philadelphia, on their Pianos:

FIRST PRIZE AND SILVER MEDAL,

THE MEDAL OF HONOUR,

AND DIPLOMA OF MERIT.

MESSRS. WEBER & CO. in announcing their success at the World's Fair, would call the attention of the Canadian public to the fact that after the most searching examination by gentlemen eminent for their Musical talent their Pianos have been awarded the above prizes. These Instruments were not made for the Exhibition, but taken from stock, being a fair representation of their Pianos. This should be a proof to Canadians that Canada can produce as good Pianos as the best imported Instruments. ☞ PRICE LIST on application.
