HALL'S

VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER.

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care.

Its effects are as wonderful and satisfactory as ever.

It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color.

It removes all eruptions, itching and dandruff, and the scalp by its use becomes white and clean.

By its tonic properties it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness, and making the hair grow thick and strong.

As a dressing nothing has been found so effectual or desirable.

Dr. A. A. Hayes, State Assayer of Massachusetts, says of it: "I consider it the best preparation for its intended purposes."

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE,

For the Whiskers.

This elegant preparation may be relied on to change the color of the beard from gray or any other undesirable shade, to brown or black, at discretion. It is easily applied, being in one preparation and quickly and effectually produces a permanent color which will neither rub nor wash off.

THE MINISTER'S COAT.

"Ministers' sons are very apt to turn out badly," said I to a gentleman who sat next to me in the car. We had met in the train, bound for Chicago, and had struck up an acquaintance. He stopped me, and, with an earnest look, which I shall never forget, said:

"Let me tell you a story. I know it is a common belief that ministers' sons are bad; but it is because people talk about the wild ones, while those who turn out well are taken as a matter of course."

But what of your story?" I asked, sitting back in my seat.

"Well," said he, "it begins with a class supper in Boston a dozen years ago. A number of old college friends had gathered in the evening for their annual reunion. Among them was the rich merchant, J. E. Williston—perhaps you have heard of him—and a poor pastor of a country church in Elmbank village, out in Western Massachusetts, whose name was Blake. A good many of the class had died, and the dozen or so elderly men who were left felt more tender than ever towards each other, as they thought of the bright old days at Harvard, and how soon no one would be left on earth who shared in that happy time. The dishes came and went, the lights glowed brilliantly, and at last the friends grew quite gay. But the tender feelings I have spoken of would come uppermost now and then; and in one of these musing moment's Williston's eye was attracted by something glistening about the coat which his friend Blake, who sat next to him, had on. He looked closer, and saw that the black cloth of which it was made had been worn so thin and smooth that it was very shiny.

"'Well Blake,' said he suddenly taking hold of his friend's arm cordially (which he somehow hadn't thought of doing before), 'how has the world gone with you lately?'

"'Dont ask,' he said, laughingly. 'You can read the whole story on my back. This old coat is a sort of balance sheet which shows my financial condition to a T.'

"Then he spoke more seriously, adding: 'It is a pretty hard life, Williston, that of a country parson. The fact is, this coat that I have is hardly fit for a man of profession to appear in, but I am going to send my boy Sam to Harvard this year, and must pinch here and there to do it.'

"'Don't give a thought of your coat, old fellow,' returned Williston. 'Nobody who knows you will ever imagine that the heart inside of it is threadbare, however the garment may look.'

"Blake was pleased with this kindly expression, and both men after that exchange of confidence felt happier. But among the various incidents of the evening this one almost passed out of the minister's mind by the next day when he started for Elmbank. Speedy as his return was, however, something meant for him had got to his destination before him. It was a letter. Taking it up he broke open an envelope and found inside a few words from Williston with a check to defray the first year's college expenses of his classmate's son.

"You are a stranger to me, sir," said my travelling companion at this point, "but I think you will appreciate the feeling with which poor Mr. Blake stood in his bare and dingy study, in his old farm parsonage, holding the letter in his hand and lifting his faithful eyes in thankfulness to God."

"Yes," I replied. "Williston did the right thing. And how was it? Did the son show that he deserved the help?"

My acquaintance looked away from me at the country through which we were passing. Then he said: "Sam Blake was a good-natured, obedient fellow enough; and was pleased to have the expense of his first college year taken off his father's shoulders; but his sense of duty didn't go very far. The Rev. Mr. Blake bought a new coat and Sam entered Harvard that fall, and there matters stopped for a while.

"A Freshman has a great deal to learn, as you know; but I think the chief thing Sam learned that term was the great difference there is between Harvard and a little village like Elmbank. Here he had society meetings to attend, and rooms of his own, with a chum, where a good deal of smoking was done by himself and friends. Sam took a natural interest in the society of young ladies, too, and had to give up some time to its cultivation. He also thought that a moderate amount of practice in the gymnasium was desirable to prevent his health breaking down under the confinement of study. So, on the whole, the actual work that he did in the college was not very extensive.

"One horribly, snowy, sleety morning, when he had got up too late for prayers, the postman brought him a note from the faculty—an 'admonition.' He dropped the pipe he was lighting, and bolted off to recitation. But he 'dreaded' immediately, and that discouraged him. He soon began to make light of the warning, and did himself no credit in his studies. Though he managed to squeeze through the examination at the end of the freshman year, he came out far down toward the foot of his class. He wasn't quite contented with himself, and thought he'd try to do better next year. But during the journey home he recovered his usual spirits.

"When he walked up the village toward the parsonage farm, he was thinking that—since he was a sophomore now—he would buy the knottiest and biggest-headed cane in Cambridge, when he should go back there. And what do you suppose was the first thing that he met at home? It was his father out in the field digging for new potatoes, his coat off and his spectacled face perspiring. The sight struck shame into the boy. He vaulted the fence, and, running up with hardly a pause for greeting, cried:

"'Oh, father, let me do that. I don't like to see you at work.'

"They went into the house, and there, when the minister reappeared after making his toilet, his son noticed that he wore the old shabby, shiny coat. At this he was more than ever astonished. The supper, also, notwithstanding that it was the first sight of the prodigal's return, was meager. Not a single luxury was on the table, and Sam observed that his father looked very thin as well as sad. Suddenly he laid down his knife and exclaim to his sister Katy:

"'Sis, what does all this mean—this going without the hired man, and starving yourselves?'

"His sister looked at him, then glanced at Mr. Blake and her mother, and made no answer.

"'I thought,' said Sam, petulently, 'that Williston's money was going to make it easy for you, father; and here the pinching is going on five times worse than ever.'

"'I don't own my friend Williston's money,' said the minister, quietly.

"'Of course not. But the five hundred dol'—Sam stopped abruptly on an entreating gesture from his sister.

"The subject was resumed. But before he went to bed Sam obtained an interview with his sister alone. He felt, secretly, that he was responsible for the depression and trouble which seemed to fill the household, but that only made him speak more impetuously. 'Now, sis,' he began, 'can I get words of sense out of you?'

"'Not until you ask politely,' she replied.

"'Well, then, please tell me what the mystery is.'

"'It oughtn't to be a mystery to you, Sam, that you haven't done well at college. Papa is terribly disappointed.'

"'I don't see why he should commit suicide if he is.' Sam retorted. 'I haven't cost him much this year.'

"'Oh, yes, you have. Do you know he actually sold his new coat?'

"'Why?' Sam frowned.

"'Because he's been trying every way to save money since he began to get reports of how you were wasting your time.'

"'What for?' asked Sam, though he began to suspect.

"'Well, he—how should I know? Don't you see? He's ashamed to have had that money from his old classmate, and he's nearly saved enough, and he's going to pay it all back. There, I was to keep it secret, and now I've told you!' And his sister burst into tears. 'You've nearly broken his heart, Sam; poor papa!'

"The next day Mr. Blake's son went off directly after breakfast and was not seen again till afternoon. Coming back he overtook his father coming from the post office.

"'I know all about it!' he exclaimed, in his excitement. 'Katy told me last night. I wish though, you'd held on to the new coat awhile.'

"'Why?' asked Mr. Blake, imperturbably.

"'Because,' said Sam, 'I'm going to pay my own way now. I've been off to-day and hired out for the season to Farmer Hedgeburton. You won't send that money to Williston, will you, father?'

"'You are too late,' was the minister's answer; 'I've just mailed the letter to him.'

"In fact, next day the kind merchant's eyes were dimmed as he read these words:

"'DEAR WILLISTON: My boy (it almost breaks my heart to say so) has not proved worthy of your generosity. I have decided to return the sum which you sent me for his last year, and you will find a draft enclosed for that amount.

"'BLAKE.'"

Here I interrupted the narrator. "Doesn't this story prove what I said at the beginning?" I asked.

"No: for that isn't the end of it. Sam went down to Boston in the autumn, with a few dollars of earnings in his pocket. He had decided to give up college, and so applied to Mr. Williston for a clerkship.

"He told him: 'I proved myself unworthy, as my father said. Now give me a chance to show myself worthy.'

"Williston gave him a position and he worked there two years. Then an opportunity offered to go west and take a partnership in—what do you think? The clothing business. Sam jumped at it; and you may believe he sent his father next Christmas the finest coat that concern could produce.

"I am a well-to-do man now, sir," continued my acquaintance, suddenly speaking in the first person, "and, when we get to Chicago, if you will come to my establishment I will show you my father's (the minister's) old shiny coat, which I preserved because it was the beginning of a fortune and made a man of me."

"Then," I exclaimed, taking him by the hand, "it is yourself you have been talking about all this time. You are—"

"Sam," continued my new friend, nodding and smiling.

A WOMAN'S INFLUENCE.

The Part Played by a Female Physician in the Chinese Treaty.

It is well known that women in various ways have exercised a very important influence in the affairs of nations. One of the latest incidents of such influence is in connection with the recent treaty between China and the United States. Some time in 1877 a Miss Leonora Howard, (a graduate of Ann Arbour University, with which Dr. D. McLean, formerly of Kingston, is connected) at that time a resident of Grand Rapids, Mich., was sent out by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church as a medical missionary to China. Miss Howard's residence was at Pekin, and her success as a physician was so decided that in time her professional services were in demand by the best families. Most important among her patients was the wife of Li Hung Chang, the viceroy and virtual ruler of China.

In treating Lady Li Miss Howard was completely successful where the best native physicians of the empire had wholly failed, and the family of the august celestial expressed their gratitude in a very marked manner, and Miss Howard's influence with Lady Li became as great, if not greater, than that of most celestial politicians with the great Li Hung Chang himself. Miss Howard is a graduate of the university of Michigan, and upon her diploma as President of the university is the name of Mr. Angell, the American Minister to China. When the proposed treaty was being talked of Lady Li asked Miss Howard if Mr. Angell was a good man, and being told that he was, she replied, "I am so glad. If you say he is good, we know he must be good." Other remarks favorable to Mr. Angell followed in the course of the conversation, and Lady Li came to look upon him as a remarkably good and wise man.

By some means or other the viceroy was informed of the favorable mention of Mr. Angell by Miss Howard, and the story probably lost none of its effect while being repeated in the highly colored language of the orient. It is not difficult to conceive how the viceroy's mind would thus be prepared to look with favor, as he did, upon what our representatives, introduced by Mr. Angell, might propose. The Pekin correspondent of New York Herald states that the result of the negotiations was largely due to Miss Howard.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

PEPPER'S REMEDIES.

PEPPER'S QUININE AND IRON TONIC contains an unvarying amount of quinine and iron. It possesses all the powers of these valuable tonics in banishing diseases and symptoms traceable to weakness, a low state of the nervous system, enfeebled condition of the body, and derangement of the general health.

PEPPER'S QUININE AND IRON TONIC strengthens the nervous and muscular system, improves digestion, animates the spirits, recruits the health. For debilitated health from the effects of hot climates this tonic is invaluable.

PEPPER'S QUININE AND IRON TONIC rouses and develops the nervous energies, enriches the blood, promotes appetite, dispels languor and depression, fortifies the digestive organs. It is a specific remedy for neuralgia, ague, indigestion, fevers of every kind, chest affections, and in wasting diseases, scrofulous tendencies, &c. The whole frame is greatly invigorated by Pepper's Tonic, the mental faculties brightened, the constitution greatly strengthened, and a return to robust health certain. Bottles, 32 doses, 4s 6d; next size 11s. Sold by chemists everywhere. The name of S. Pepper, Bedford Laboratory, London, must be on the label. There is no Tonic so certain in effect as Pepper's Quinine and Iron. It is strongly recommended to residents in India and the Colonies, and should always be kept ready for use in every case of fever or febrile condition.

TARAXACUM AND PODOPHYLLIN: Prepared only by J. Pepper, London. This Fluid combination, extracted from medicinal roots, is now used instead of blue pill and calomel for the cure of dyspepsia, biliousness, and all symptoms of congestion of the liver, which are generally pain beneath the shoulders, head-ache, drowsiness, no appetite, furred tongue, disagreeable taste in the morning, giddiness, disturbance of the stomach, and feeling of general depression. It sets the sluggish liver in motion, very slightly acts on the bowels, giving a sense of health and comfort within 24 hours. It is the safest medicine. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is a fluid made only by J. Pepper, Bedford Laboratory, London, whose name is on every label. Bottles, 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. Sold by all chemists. A most valuable and essential medicine for India, Australia, the Cape and colonies generally.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER will darken gray hair, and in a few days completely bring back the natural colour. The effect is superior to that produced by an instantaneous dye, and does not injure the skin. Large bottles, 1s. 6d. Lockyer's is equal to the most expensive hair restorer.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER is the best for restoring gray hair to its former colour. It produces a perfectly natural shade and is absolutely harmless. Recommended for destroying scurf and encouraging growth of new hair.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.—Sulphur being highly prized for its stimulant, cleansing, healthful action on the hair glands, LOCKYER'S RESTORER is strongly recommended. It is most agreeable in use, and never fails in its action on the colour glands, always restoring and maintaining that which has been lost. No other hair dressing is requisite. Large bottles, 1s. 6d. Sold by chemists, hairdressers and perfumers in London, the country, and throughout the year. Lockyer's is equal to any of the high priced preparations.

CENTENNIAL AWARDS

WEBER & CO.

PIANO-FORTE MANUFACTURERS,

KINGSTON, ONTARIO,

Have been Awarded by the International Jury at the World's Fair, Philadelphia, on their Pianos:

FIRST PRIZE AND SILVER MEDAL,

THE MEDAL OF HONOUR,

AND DIPLOMA OF MERIT

MESSRS. WEBER & CO. in announcing their success at the World's Fair, would call the attention of the Canadian public to the fact that after the most searching examination by gentlemen eminent for their Musical talent their Pianos have been awarded the above prizes. These Instruments were not made for the Exhibition, but taken from stock, being a fair representation of their Pianos. This should be a proof to Canadians that Canada can produce as good Pianos as the best imported Instruments. ☞ PRICE-LIST on application.
