The telephone means much to the farmer's family, especially the younger people. With a telephone in their home, friends are always within reach. But without it they are cut off from many enjoyable functions.

Telephone service is moderate in cost — only a few cents a day.

Is there anything you can think of which gives so much for so little? It keeps every member of the family in touch with the world outside, it summons aid in emergencies, it is a tireless messenger that is always ready.
