The Town of Halton Hills and the Halton Hills Public Library has announced a new lecture series set to kick off next month featuring faculty from the University of Guelph.

In a release sent Monday, Nov. 27, the library said it will use funding received from the Ontario Seniors Community Grant program to support what it is calling a "provocative" lecture series.

"The Halton Hills Lecture Series is an exciting collaborative event between the library, the Town of Halton Hills, and the University of Guelph," said chief librarian Geoff Cannon in the release. "This generous grant, provided by the Ministry of Seniors Affairs, will allow the library to feature fascinating talks from across a variety of disciplines that support lifelong learning."

The first lecture in the series will take place Dec. 13 at 7:30 p.m. at the John Elliot Theatre in Georgetown. Dr. Ian Spears will discuss: "Why Conflict Resolution Fails?" and the reasons behind the seemingly endless wars we see occurring around the world.

The free lectures series will feature four more dates scheduled at the John Elliot Theatre through April 2018, including:

- Jan. 17: Exploring The Healthy Habits and Behaviours of Families
- Feb. 21: Lucy Maud Montgomery and the 100th Anniversary of World War One
- Mar. 21: Has Feminism Succeeded?
- April 25: Communities in a Changing Climate
