LIGHT FROM THE MARITIMES

For some time I have been very interested in various reports of the results of extension work carried on by St. Francis Xavier University in Nova Scotia. From several bulletins, from articles in the Farmer Magazine and elsewhere, I had gathered some idea of this unusual experiment.

With this information as a background, I was pleased to learn from the regular United Farmers' broadcast one Wednesday evening that H. H. Hannam was making a tour of the Maritimes and would pay particular attention to social develpoments.

Upon his return to Ontario, Mr. Hannam devoted two evenings on the air to reflections on his observations in Nova Scotia. Travelling part of the time in the company of Prof. A. B. MacDonald, who, with Dr. M. M. Coady, is in charge of St. Francis extension work, Mr. Hannam indeed had a splendid opportunity to study the new cooperatives.

This project has centred in seven counties which are on Cape Breton Island and the adjoining mainland.

During the last five years there have been formed some 950 study groups with a membership numbering between seven and eight thousand. These small groups meet regularly to discuss social questions and other matters. They precede every cooperative project that is launched; in fact, several of them are formed in any district where any such venture is contemplated.

A six-week's training course for leaders is held each winter at the university in Antigonish. A library service is set up which makes modern books on social subjects available to the mass of the people. Use is made of a system of packages of pamphlets which circulate from group to group. Interest is aroused and maintained through the Extension Bulletin, an easily understood sheet published monthly during the winter season.

Mr. Hannam could not distinguish anything essentially different in the people of this area that would induce them to respond so wholeheartedly to education and suggestion to cooperate. He commented on the Highland Scotch ancestry of the inhabitants but doubted if these might make them different from the people of other areas. There seemed no reason to expect that given adequate leadership and suitable facilities, such success might not be expected elsewhere.

Very marked was the result in human values. In their new economic freedom, the people have found for themselves a new dignity as producers. Their new cultural acquirements are reflected in their general outlook as well as in a new thought for their persons and for their homes. In this latter field the women are coming into their own. It is also worthy of note that some of the new cooperative centres have actually replaced former bar-rooms with unquestionable social effects.

The Credit Union, which is in reality a form of cooperative banking, looms large in the picture. Seventy of these formed in three years stand at marked contrast to a total of one in Ontario. These, with numerous cooperative stores, collective marketing schemes and cooperative processing plants, form the bulk of the new social endeavors.

Anyone who is concerned about the welfare of his community cannot refrain from wondering what might be accomplished in this province if a number of communities were stirred as have been the farming and fishing communities of Cape Breton.

A HORSE AND A HAY STACK

(Fergus News-Record)

A farmer over near Stratford had a bright idea. A stack of hay was being built and he decided that the easiest way to tramp it down would be to saddle his horse and ride it around on the growing stack. Everything worked fine till the stack was completed and the horse was on top of it, with no way to get it down. The neighbors were called into consultation a half load of hay was backed up to the stack and the horse made to step on it. After the hay had been shifted the horse was still up on the wagon, so it was driven into the river and the horse pushed off so that it swam ashore.

MAKE A WILL

If you die without a will, here's what the law does:

1. If a wife is left, but no children, your wife receives the first $1,000 and half of the net estate then remaining; the other half goes to your relatives. If there are no relatives, this half goes to the Crown.

2. If a wife is left and one child each takes one-half of your estate. If the child is a minor, he or she cannot get the share until the age of 21 is reached; in the meantime, the court takes full charge of this part of the estate.

3. If a wife and more than one child are left, the wife receives one-third of the estate, and the remaining two-thirds is divided among the children (the grandchildren) receive such share.

4. In addition, there are a great many more distributions the law compels be made depending upon the relationship of various legal heirs. Furthermore, the administrator is expected, if at all possible, to liquidate within a year, and this coupled with the legal distributions, frequently result in a situation you never intended.

It can be seen that the above distribution might mean great hardship, especially in the case of modest estates. The only way to avoid this is to make a will.

A fall session of the Dominion parliament is considered as very unlikely. That means Ottawa will have to wait until early in the new year to fill its lodging houses.

"Did your wife's father follow you when you eloped?"

"Yes, and he's still living with us."

Guest: "Gosh, I wsh I could afford a car like this."

Owner: "So do I."
