Safeguard Well Purity

Next in importance to the location of the farm well which should be far removed from likely sources of contamination are the protective measures which may be taken to safeguard the purity of the water. The first step after digging or drilling the well is to protect it from the entrance of surface water. The well must have a good cover of concrete, stone or wood. If the well is deep, it should be fitted with a galvanized iron pipe reaching to the bottom, care being taken that the lower end of the pipe is efficiently sealed to the rock, also that the top of the pipe is sealed to the cover. Otherwise surface water may trickle down the pipe into the well.

If the well is shallow and wide the walls of the well should be made impervious to an adequate depth. Ten or twelve feet is the usual depth recommended for the impervious wall which may be of concrete, puddled clay or cement tile. The wall should be continued upwards one foot above the surface of the ground. By this means, surface water must filter through a depth of ten or twelve feet of earth before it can enter the well, and if the earth is in a reasonably clean condition, the water thus becomes purified.

Further safeguards are the turfing of the area immediately surrounding the well, fencing to prevent the approach of animals, and refraining from using fertilizer within the vicinity.

LIVER NOT SLUGGISH ON PACIFIC COAST

An active liver is the sign of a good disposition. It seems to work that way with halibut men on the Pacific and Atlantic Coasts. A few years ago Science made the discovery that Halibut livers are a potent source of vitamins and other elements good for the body. Large medicinal and drugs organizations immediately began to buy up all the Halibut livers in sight. Back in 1934 they paid 23 cents a pound out at the Pacific and only slightly lower than that for the Atlantic product. Then demand increased, promoting a scarcity, and the price went to 36.5 cents a pound in 1935. Now the offers are around 45 cents a pound.

Last year 10,192,000 pounds of Halibut were produced on the Pacific Coast and the quantity of black Cod was not far short of 1,000,000 pounds while there were fine landing also of ling cod, red cod and cod. With a continuation of the 1935 standard this year, the medical activity in Halibut livers should add much additional revenue not only to jubilant Pacific Cod and Halibut men, but to their brothers on the Atlantic as well.

So, when a prolonged business trip found him at loose ends in a strange town that sunny Sunday morning, his cup of sorrow and discontent was overflowing — until he suddenly thought of Long Distance and the new Low Sunday Rates.
