MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

Provincial election activities being lived down by the average voter, it is even now time for civic patriots to be preparing for the selection of representatives in this year's municipal elections. These contests affect the lives of residents in the various cities, towns, villages and townships to almost as great an extent as those for Provincial and Dominion seats, and the electors do well to choose in each case the best man offering. There is this added reason for taxpayers taking keen interest in municipal elections. The Councillor elected now may be the Reeve or Mayor deemed worthy of promotion to the Legislature or to the House of Commons in a later contest. It is quite in order that a man of parts, faithful to his trust, should be given opportunity by his record, to aspire to the higher office. First then, choose the best, and if he proves exceptionally useful to the public, "groom" him for higher service.

A COSTLY LESSON

In travelling along the highways at night one sees many horse-drawn vehicles without the protection of reflectors or lights. Last week, near Thornbury, an accident occurred in which a farmer lost his life when, according to the police, he failed to provide proper lighting equipment for night travel. Only a small expenditure would be required to provide proper protection for themselves, and others, if they are caught on the roads after dark. No doubt many intend to procure the lights for their vehicles, but there is always a next time. In the meanwhile such accidents keep occurring and the lesson is never learned.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Alberta has an albino pony. So far, Mr. Aberhart has not claimed that he is to be credited with this novelty.

Tourists are saying that Canadian roads are better this year than last, but there are still declarations that too many bumps are found on some thoroughfares.

A recent tourist in Europe found "the King and Queen of Denmark the most perfect of royal democratic lovers." The traveller does not say that she visited at or near the home of Great Britain's King and Scottish Queen, otherwise she would likely have changed her opinion and placed King George and Queen Elizabeth at the head of democratic Sovereigns,—on occasions of national ceremony attractively stately; in contact with the populace, as the Scotch say, "Aye hame ower."

The broken heart is no fable. Describing his researches in the London "Lancet," Dr. Edrich Wittkowen says that mental stress can cause heart pain. This stress may be caused by failure in business, impending loss of employment or disappointment in married life. The most noted case that we know of was caused by the loss of her only daughter by a former resident of this village. She died in the bloom of young life from virulent disease contracted while giving her services as a V.A.D. nurse to stricken soldiers from the great war. The mother, warmly attached to her devoted child never got over the bereavement and medical experts declared that her subsequent ill health and death were due to a "Broken heartedness" caused by her great sorrow.

"It's a verra serious question, Maggie, that 'm wrestling wi' "

"Oh, what is it?" enquired Mrs. Fraser.

Well, is it better tae tak' long strides an' save shoe leather, or short anes and' avoid tearin' ma pants?"
