and study to the matter. Mr. Lapointe thought the matter was of such vital importan t that it should be further discussed and investigated before action was taken. Personally, it would seem that this is the psychological moment to act. The great majority of the House will favor it. It was introduced by a Conservative, one above reproach, and the government is undoubtedly sympathetic. Even Mr. Bennett assisted all speakers though up to the present he hasn't made a speech on it. Such a happy combination of circumstances might not occur again in many a long day.

Criticised Unemployment Policy

The complacency of the government, with its majority of one hundred or over, has been effective armor against all attack in the last two and a half years.. But this week the Hon. H. H. Stevens pierced that armor and aroused interest and something like hope in all opposition ranks, when he most effectively criticised the government's unemployment policy. His thrusts brought Norman McLeod Rogers to his feet again and again. From the point of view of political effectiveness the Stevens' speech was easily the best made this session.

It was a week of much good speaking. The Hon. (Chubby) Power is always lucid in a presentation of any subject, however complex. He was particularly so when introducing a Bill which deals with the publication of receipts and expenditures and the limitation of amounts to be spent in election campaigns. The Bill is a lengthy one but, in the main, is designed to eliminate corrupt practices during elections. By it the sources and distribution of all election funds will be supervised and publicly revealed.

Mr. Power said that our present democratic system is built on confidence and that if confidence is destroyed our institutions are impaired. "A greater threat by far to democracy than the 'isms' which now infest our body politic is a belief that electoral manipulation, electoral manoeuvering, is undermining the very basis of democracy. There is going on at the present time a struggle between totalitarianism and democracy. It has its reflections in this country and it develves upon us who believe in our present system of government to endeavour to cure the ills that are inherent in it."

He dealt at length with the pressure that is put upon candidates at election to contribute to carnivals, church festivals, building funds, fairs, and said "The politician's extremity is the purist's opportunity."

But the week wasn't all work. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Bailey (my sister Lilly) and their twin daughters, Jean and Lena visited me. In a couple of days we crowded in sight-seeing entaining, meeting parliamentary people, listening to debates, shopping and one show (Deanna Durbin). The liked swimming in a luxurious pool at the Chateau Laurier a lot better than they did the debates. But their schoolteacher aunt saw that they acquired some knowledge of the set-up of government.

A regular rash of entertainment broke out just previous to the Easter recess. But my heavy schedule permitted me to attend only a luncheon given by Senator George P. and Mrs. Graham, for the Victorian Order of Nurses, in the ballroom of the Chateau, a reception at Manor House, the home of Senator Cairine Wilson, for the V.O.N., and a luncheon in the Parliamentary restaurant with Mrs. Hector McKinnon hostess—wife of our own Hector, one of the best brains in the Service.

One Ring that Led to Another . . .

JACK ROBERTS and Sally have been "friends" for some time. But Jack took Sally by surprise (she really hadn't expected a ring this spring) and in this case one ring naturally led to another. Sally just has to call Mother who is visiting out-of-town. "We're to be married right away," she says happily. And Sally will call some of her out-of-town friends as well, who will appreciate having the news "first". Wouldn't you?
