LITTLE-RUMBLE

A very interesting wedding was solemnized at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Hillsdale, Ontario, on Saturday, October 8, when Grace M. Rumble, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. Rumble, became the bride of Thomas E. Little, son of Dr. and Mrs. A. E. Little of Flesherton. The church was very prettily decorated in brown and yellow chrysanthemums and the ceremony was performed by Rev J. K. West of Monkton, assisted by Rev. Mr. Ritchie, pastor of Hillsdale. Miss Eva Rumble played the wedding march and sang during the signing of the register, accompanied by Mrs. Holmes. Mrs. K. Rumble of Detroit was matron of honor. The groom was attended by Mr. John Costa of Noranda and the ushers were Messrs. Lou Campbell and Carlyle McDonald of Toronto.

The reception was held in the church parlors where Mrs. Rumble received the guests with the groom's mother who was gowned in rust sheer crepe with black hat and corsage of Talisman roses.

The happy couple left by motor for Montreal, the bride travelling in a suit of black velour du norde with black sable collar and black velvet tricolor hat. They will live in Noranda where the groom is manager of Waite-Amulet.

A magician, performing at Fort Erie on Labor Day caught a bullet fired from a Lee-Enfield 303 rifle in his mouth, an act that magicians have been leary of and one that has killed a dozen in the past few years. Theodore Annenmann, the first man to perform the act and live, spun around and dropped to the ground when the bullet hit him, and spectators cried out, "He's killed." But he got up to his feet again, and spat out the same marked slug into a saucer.

Osprey Old Boys Elect Their Officers

(By I. H. P.)

To-night they gave this timid soul member the most important portfolio in the Cabinet after all. He was duly elected "Official Scribe", his duty being to convey to the folks at home the goings-on of the Old Boys and Girls in Toronto.

It happened sort of accidently. The president had been elected, the first, second, third and so on right down to the last assistant to the deputy. Everybody had been elected except a few modest objectors and this timid soul. He might have secured a nomination for some office, but, be it said, he thoughtlessly, for just a second, pretended to line up with the conscientious objectors and—was left out!

It seems, now, that this slight display of modesty was accepted with somewhat undue and startling suddenness. He was only pretending, mind you, just ever so little. He must have looked woebegone. But his disconsolate appearance at length attracted attention. Then ensued a wave of whispering. Osprey boys and girls had got their heads together and something was bound to happen. The very high office of "Official Scribe" was created. Just like that! And as this bewildered soul was the only one not preparing to leave for home, he was hurriedly nominated and elected. Shall he dare say almost unanimously. There was some confusion which fortunately staved off a show of hands of those opposing the motion.

After the full realization of their recklessness had dawned, they did the happiest—the most magnificent thing. They appointed as assistant scribe, the pretty, young Miss Mary Findlay. (This oldtimer, family man hopes that any such extemporaneous remarks do not jeopardize his few remaining tufts of "silver threads among the gold" and he be forced into retirement, causing the expense of an early by-election.) See that comma after the word "pretty" thirty degrees west of north from here. It's his idea but could be a typographical error.

He feels better now but this timid soul hasn't had such an inferiority complex since he was no bigger than a four-year-old "worry wart." Not since the big, rough village boys, on the way home from school, filled the back-side of his pants with snow. The behaviour that urged them to gang up on them and the drooping stern of his pants really invited the ignominy. Again he must accept responsibility with his customary benign grace. The "built-in trunk" effect of his trousers was, no doubt, due to the economies of the times. They had been designed for a dual purpose; in day time to shield his tender bacon and, at night to join the (shameful) association of several large flannel petticoats, shielding from early and late frosts the cucumber bed which always (darned thing) required weeding on the very best trout fishing days.

There were still other economies that affected the "tame bee" appearance of boys' pants. Besides providing for natural growth expansion, the dressmaker must have anticipated the swelling occasioned by too oft massaging by the school master's maple pointer. Pants which were too tight, you see, had very few advantages. What could a feller do when girls, whom he had even considered in the light of future matrimony only the day before, were snickering behind their windows along the village street. He dare not pull the nail out of his suspender. He couldn't get the snow out with his woollen mitts on. So the snow began to melt in the heat of his consuming ignominy.

He had long outgrown his coat. The sleeves were so short and tight that he had given up trying to yank down a dry place over his chapped, red wrists just to humor a runny nose. They seemed to shrink back to the elbows at every prospect of contacting the shiny wet sniveller. The stingy little pockets had been designed to barely hold the belongings of a four-year-old boy, let alone all the assets of one almost seven. They contained, or partly contained, among other things, a large-handled jack-knife with a broken big blade and a tightly rusted shut little blade, a slippery old slate rag, a large spool peashooter (but a good one), two dandy elm-crotch catapults and an even hundred short, stubby slate pencils. Now where, he asks you, did a fellow have room for his red bandana It would be just like buying a money purse on tick.

This press-committee has learned that modesty doesn't pay. It just gets you elected to a pick and shovel job like this. They are, however, determined doggedly to fulfil their duties. The unimportant minor offices were filled as follows: Honorary president, Mr. Caspar Sproule; Honorary treasurer, Mr. T. B. Perigo; President, Nelson Pedlar; Vice-president, Ross Long; Secretary-treasurer, Miss Verna Hudson; Assistant secretary-treasurer, Miss Lillian Price.

The meeting of the members was held in Earlscourt Community Hall. We regret to have to report that the old codgers behaved most unseemly; imagining they could square-dance, laughing their heads off like that.

The pretty, shy,but albeit critical, assistant scribe are not getting anywhere in this reporting business, so they will have to begin all over again, if, as and when they become a little better acquainted.

Punishment Fell Short

At Guelph a man and his wife were convicted of having contributed to the death of an orphan boy whom they had taken into their home to raise. The evidence adduced showed such heartlessness on their part as scarcely conceivable in any community, especially one as prosperous os that about the village of Fergus where the inhuman pair lived. The man was sentenced to six months imprisonment and his wife, whom the judge believed "the man of the house", to one year. His Honor was too merciful. Both may count themselves fortunate that they got off so lightly. Had they been given the experience of starvation and neglect, plus a few lashes each, it would not have elicited any sympathy for them from the public. Rather would such a sentence have been applauded. Young lives are too precious to be abused by low minded adults.

THE PARTY IS KNOWN

An amusing little game of bluff resulted in what seems to have been a scoreless tie as played over two issues of a small weekly newspaper published in Perth County a while back. One week this significant advertisement appeared: "The man who picked up a wallet on Main Street was recognized. He is requested to return it." Seven days passed but the bereaved wallet owner was still mourning his loss. Then in the next issue of the paper he read with considerable dismay: "The recognized man who picked up your wallet requests the loser to come at any time and collect it."—Chesley Enterprise.
